Group protests Reagan plan to fund Nicaraguan contras

By PATTY REINERT News Editor

About 35 members of Citizens in Solidarity with the People of Central America demonstrated at noon Monday outside the K-State Union to protest President Ronald Reagan's proposed $100 million aid package for the Nicaraguan contras.

The U.S. House of Representatives is expected to vote on the proposal to-

Lyman Baker, instructor of English, said the demonstration was staged in response to Reagan's nationally televised address Sunday

Don Hedrick, associate professor of English, said Reagan gave the impression that all contras were formerly supportive of the revolution and were then "turned off" by it.

"The misrepresentation that Reagan is giving us is a lie," Hedrick said. "It's a consequential one, it's a deadly one and it's a malicious one."

According to an April 1985 Congressional study, Hedrick said, 46 of the 48 contra leaders were former national guardsman under the leadership of the U.S.-backed dictator Anastasio Somoza.

new battle cry, "No podemos vencer, pero podemos matar - We can't win, but we can kill."

Neighboring countries do not share the Reagan administration's perception of the contras as democratic freedom fighters, Hedrick said. Honduran officials view them as a 'violent and potentially destablizing force," he said. Hedrick also quoted a New York Times letter to the editor from Edgar Chamorro, a former contra leader.

Chamorro wrote, "When I joined the FDN (Fuerza Democratica Nicaraguense, the principal contra group) in 1981, I hoped it would be controlled by Nicaraguans and dedicated to objectives we would determine. But the contras were, and are, a proxy army controlled by the U.S. government.

"If U.S. support were terminated they would not only be incapable of conducting any military activities against the Sandinistas, but would also immediately begin to disintegrate. I resigned rather than continue as a Central Intelligence Agency puppet."

Chamorro also wrote that during his four years as a contra director, it

Hedrick said the contras have a was "premeditated policy to terrorize civilian non-combatants to prevent them from cooperating with the government. Hundreds of civilian murders, mutilations, tortures and rapes were committed in pursuit of this policy, of which the contra leaders and their CIA superiors were well aware. But no serious effort to stop them has been made, because terror is the most effective weapon of the contras.'

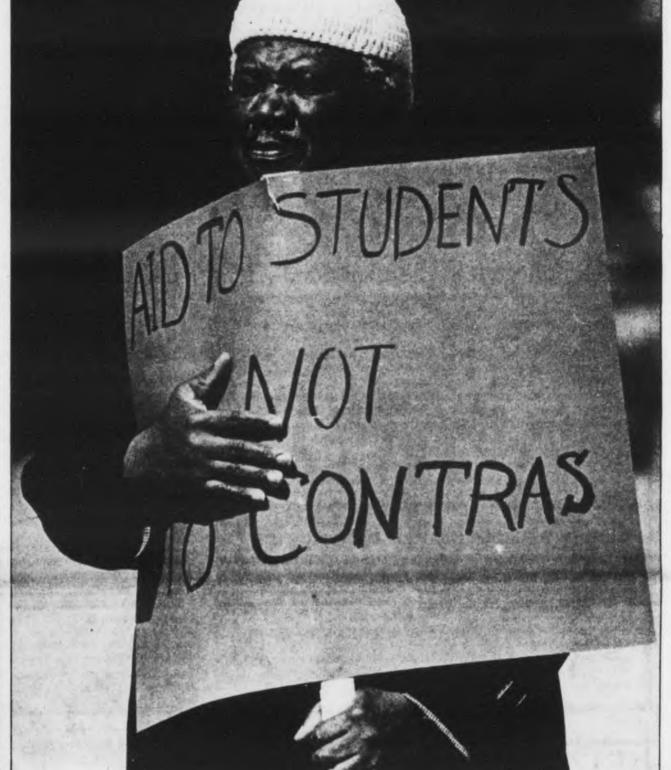

Julie Coates, instructor at University for Man, said since the revolution in 1979, housing, health care, land reform and education have improved. The infant mortality rate has been cut by about 50 percent, she

Before the revolution most of the arable land was used to produce export crops. Nicaragua is now selfsufficient in rice production, a staple

"I asked one woman about the revolution and she said, 'Before the new government, my children were hungry and now we have beans. That's all I know," Coates said.

Senate passes state sales tax increase

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Kansas Senate Wednesday passed, 24-16, and sent the House Gov. John Carlin's proposal to increase the state's 3 percent sales tax by one penny on the dollar to generate $190 million new revenue to fund state government.

Passage followed some 21/2 hours of emotion-charged debate as senators sparred over the wisdom of raising taxes, and the sales tax in particular.

Sens. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, and Frank Gaines, D-Augusta, led the charge in support of the bill, painting a grim picture of the state's future if the Legislature does not agree to invest in Kansas via a tax Proposal to generate $190 million hike.

James Francisco, D-Mulvane, was most vocal in his opposition to the sales tax because he said it hits the elderly and poor

The first action of the body was to remove a $5.9 million rebate to Kansas businesses to compensate them for collecting the tax. The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee added the rebate to the bill, saying it wasn't fair to require businesses to be unpaid tax collectors for the state.

The full Senate removed the rebate as only 14 members supported it and 20 opposed it.

The majority then rebuffed two attempts to amend the bill. The first, by Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha, would have earmarked $50 million for property tax relief to the state's 304 school districts.

The second amendment, sponsored by Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, would have increased the tax an extra half-penny, from 3 percent to 41/2 percent.

In addition, Martin wanted to exempt purchases of food at grocery stores from the sales tax. He said the sales tax on food is regressive and unfair to poor Kansans.

University hazing policy faces revision

By MELISSA BRUNE Staff Writer

The University's hazing policy is in the process of being revised as a result of "inconsistencies" and "procedural problems," said Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs.

She said the difficulties with the policy arose during the fall when the policy had to be used for the first time since its adoption four years ago by the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils.

The Alpha Tau Omega fraternity was sanctioned during the fall for an alleged hazing incident which violated campus policy. The policy prohibits actions or activites which cause "discomfort, pain, fright, disgrace, injury, or which is personally degrading or which violates any federal, state, local statutes or University policy.'

Gary Arroyo, sophomore in veterinary medicine and president of IFC, said the problem with the hazing policy was it was not specific enough in outlining procedures for its

He said the policy was not concise about how hearings were to be conducted, and the lack of an exact outline for this procedure created confusion for those reviewing the case. Arroyo said the revisions are being made because the procedural process was too time-consuming. A task force of 12 current and past fraternity presidents is revising the

"We want it to be spelled out so that next time they don't have to go back to the (chapter) constitutions for directions on procedure," Arroyo

At the state level, a bill prohibiting hazing has been passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives for approval. The bill would make hazing a Class A misdemeanor and allow a hazing victim to seek compensation for mental or physical damages

Nancy Zogleman, administrative assistant to Senate Majority Leader Paul "Bud" Burke, R-Leawood, said the legislative action is designed to act as a deterrent to hazing. The bill would make legal action available to a hazing victim who was not satisfied with the results of campus procedures, she said.

Student Body President Steve Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, said the campus branch of the Associated Students of Kansas is expected to draft a statement of support for the state legislation. Johnson said ASK members had problems with the vagueness of some of the wording of the original bill, but the problems were eliminated through amendments made while the bill was before the Senate.

The legislation would not take powers from the campus level, Arroyo said. IFC will continue to handle any hazing cases which may occur at the campus level involving a fraternity or sorority, he said.

Robel said the legislation would make it possible for a victim to file a civil suit against the person or organization doing the hazing in addition to filing a complaint on cam-

The campus hazing policy is now being reviewed by Associate University Attorney Dorothy Thompson, Robel said. It will then be sent back to the task force members, who will distribute it to the IFC and Panhellenic councils for a vote. The policy will then have to be accepted by the Council on Student Affairs.

AIDS program funding may excede thousands, group members agree

By LEANNE STOWE Campus Editor

The University AIDS Committee agreed Wednesday that beginning to fund its proposed University-wide AIDS education would require several thousand dollars.

The education policy was set up to "create a general awareness and understanding of the disease." The near-final draft policy includes the purpose of education, identification of target populations, the means by which education should be accomplished and AIDS resource people who can be contacted.

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, said William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, requested the amount the implementation of the policy would take be submitted along with the policy.

The committee discussed the figure of $30,000 as the amount to implement AIDS education at another university. It was then decided that a figure from $2,000 to $5,000 would be a more reasonable figure, but it did not include funds for the salary of a person to implement the policy.

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene, said the committee could "beg, borrow and steal" to get funds to put the education plan into work, but that borrowing tapes from other sources would not be viable for the University's purpose.

"You need it when you need it," she said.

The target populations in the draft are University administrators, deans, department heads, faculty and staff, Lafene Student Health Center staff, living-group staffs and alternative-lifestyle groups.

It also included the staff at the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, departments where there is a laboratory setting, veterinary medicine staff, U-LearN staff, FONE staff, international students, University food handlers, childcare facilities staffs and many others.

The means by which the education would be accomplished are on what the estimated several thousand dollars would be spent. The means include group workshops, seminars with current audio-visual demonstrations, pamphlets and brochures. It also calls for publicizing nationwide telephone hotline numbers and distributing information through DIAL tapes. DIAL is a phone-in information system.

While Jeff Martin, psychologist intern at Lafene Mental Health Center, expressed reservations about volunteers at U-LearN giving out information about AIDS. Paul Nelson, coordinator of FONE, representative from Student Governing Association and junior in pre-nursing, said the volunteers at FONE will be acting to direct callers toward professionals who can answer their questions and not to give advice.

'The number at Lafene should be given so accuracy of information could be guaranteed," Burke said.

The draft education policy also suggested that a public affairs person be acquired to handle the print and broadcast media. Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney, said the committee would

Soviets send cargo to space station

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union Wednesday launched a cargo spacecraft with supplies for two cosmonauts aboard the new Mir orbiting space station, the official news agency Tass reported.

Tass said the unmanned cargo ship Progress 25 was launched at 1:08 p.m. Moscow time (5:08 a.m. EST) and carried "exhaustible materials and various cargoes."

The Baikonur launch site in central Asia is the only currently operating Soviet launch site.

It is the first cargo ship sent to the space station, which the Soviets say is the world's first permanently staffed orbiting laboratory. New cosmonauts will be launched periodically to relieve the Mir crew. Mir is the Russian word for peace.

The Mir station was launched unoccupied on Feb. 20, and was boarded Saturday by its first crew, cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovev. Radio Moscow reported Wednesday that the two cosmonauts, who were launched last Thursday aboard the Soyuz T-15 spacecraft, are adjusting well to the lack of gravity and are busy checking systems on the space station

Police free Swedish murder suspect

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - A Swedish man held as a suspect in the assassination of Prime Minister Olof Palme was freed Wednesday, a police spokesman said. He was not formally charged in the case.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer announced earlier Wednesday that the 32-year-old man would be released because "an important link in the chain of circumstantial evidence has broken.

"We have had a confrontation with a witness today (Wednesday) and that confrontation did not give what we expected," Holmer said, refusing to elaborate.

Holmer refused to say whether police remained suspicious of the man, whose name has not been widely publicized in Sweden because of libel laws

Senate accepts branch banking bill

TOPEKA - The Senate on Wednesday sent to Gov. John Carlin a limited branch banking bill designed to ensure that financial services remain in small communities in danger of losing their only bank.

The Senate accepted a joint House-Senate conference committee's amendments to a bill that would allow Kansas banks to buy and operate as a branch a failing bank in a one-bank town with a population of 3,500 or less.

The Senate adopted, 38-1, the conference committee's report, which worked out a compromise between versions passed earlier in the Senate and the House.

Olive oil reduces cholesterol level

BOSTON — Replacing saturated fats with olive oil in food helps reduce cholesterol, according to new research that suggests Mediterranean fare is a healthy alternative to very low-fat diets for people whose cholesterol levels are too high.

Olive oil is high in mono-unsaturated fat, and the research shows that eating food rich in this fat effectively lowers cholesterol levels in the blood, just as a very low-fat diet does

To benefit from this diet, however, people must largely give up saturated fat and replace it with the mono-unsaturated variety.

A high blood cholesterol level sharply increases the risk of heart disease. Many health guidelines urge Americans with this problem to restrict their fat intake to the amounts common in Asian countries, where heart disease is rare.

Heart disease also is relatively unusual in such Mediterranean regions as southern Italy and Greece, where olive oil is used liberal-

"This paper supports the concept that a Mediterranean-type diet, high in mono-unsaturates, represents a reasonable alternative to a very low-fat diet for Americans," said Dr. Scott M. Grundy, who conducted the study. "We may have been a little too rigid in our dietary recommendations, saying that everybody has to eat the same diet to get the benefit of cholesterol lowering.

Grundy's research, conducted at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Dallas, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Foundation prints Chinese Bibles

NEW YORK - The American Bible Society says that 100,000 Chinese Bibles and more than 60,000 New Testaments have been printed in China on paper supplied by the United Bible Societies.

The paper was supplied to the Amity Foundation, a nongovernment, non-church social service organization initiated by Chinese Christians, with the foundation arranging with them to print the Bibles in Nanjing

Han Wenzao, general secretary of the foundation, reports that "almost all of the complete Bibles have now been sold out." Regional

Pulitzer Prize winning author dies

NEW YORK - Bernard Malamud left behind an unfinished novel, several unpublished short stories and a life's work that placed him among the century's finest American writers, his publisher said

Malamud was writing right up to his death Tuesday at age 71, said Robert Giroux, who edited Malamud's first book, "The Natural," in 1952 and published every other book he wrote, including the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel "The Fixer."

Giroux said he had spoken with Malamud recently. "We talked about Verdi, and how he wrote 'Otello' at 80 and then 'Falstaff' afterward. He was going to do wonderful things... His death is such a shock."

Malamud died at his apartment of heart failure. He had had a heart bypass operation some years ago, but had not been ill, said Timothy Seldes, his literary agent.

When "The Natural," his 1952 novel about an aging baseball star who makes a comeback, was made into a movie starring Robert Redford, Malamud said he was pleased "to be recognized once more as an American writer.'

Malamud won the National Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize in 1967 for "The Fixer," the story of a Jewish handyman charged with ritual murder in czarist Russia. The novel was made into a movie starring Alan Bates.

William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, came to K-State 33 years ago as an assistant professor of mathematics and was promoted to dean in 1969.

College offers variety for education, growth

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

(Editor's note: This is the third in a series of 10 stories on University deans. Friday's series will feature Randolph Pohlman, dean of the Col-lege of Business Administration.)

Making decisions that affect the quality of education for the years ahead is the most essential part of the college dean's job, said William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Stamey came to K-State 33 years ago as an assistant professor of mathematics and has served the University in a number of capacities. In 1963, Stamey was chosen to represent the College of Arts and Sciences as associate dean and in 1969 was promoted to dean.

Stamey said he plans to continue to teach mathematics at K-State or retire after his term as dean is over. Whatever he does, he plans to remain in Manhattan, he said.

"We (Stamey's family) have always been happy and well-treated here. We like the town of Manhattan," Stamey said.

Stamey said the most enjoyable part in his position as dean is the contact he makes with students and

If he were to offer advice to freshmen coming to K-State, he would tell them to "take responsibility for their own future and take responsibility for their own education and growth as people."

Stamey said K-State is special because of the kind of people here. The faculty are dedicated to performing academic responsibilities and helping students, Stamey said.

Stamey said the college offers tremendous variety and opportunity to students.

"I am constantly pleased about the quality of education at K-State, particularly in the College of Arts and Sciences," Stamey said. "The people in the state of Kansas are getting a marvelous bargain in this college. The faculty are dedicated to providing, at relatively low cost, excellent education for anyone who comes here. I am proud to be a part

Stamey added that his goals were to continue the quality of the instruction and research activities and to maintain the level of enroll-

Kansas milk may harbor contaminate

Dairy products contaminated with the pesticide heptachlor have now been found in stores in Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

Grocery stores in Manhattan report they haven't found any contaminated milk

We haven't had any problems. All of our milk comes from Kansas," said George Kandt, manager of the Dillon's store on Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

Jackson Ice Cream Inc., Hutchinson, the dairy supply company for the Dillon's stores in Kansas, buys all of its milk from dairies in the state, said Robert Thiessen, vice president of operations.

Pat Lynch, manager of Food 4 Less, 401 E. Poyntz Ave., said he checked with suppliers and was told there wasn't any problem.

The tainted milk problem, starting in Arkansas and including dairy farms in Oklahoma and Missouri, occurred after dairy herds were fed a mash feed contaminated with the pesticide heptachlor.

The feed was a mash byproduct of gasohol production and was sold by a feed company in Arkansas, which obtained the feed from a co-owned gasohol plant, officials said.

Milk and other dairy products were recalled and destroyed in the Wichita area by sup-

Kansas to salute Ag Day with celebration

By BECKY OHLDE Agriculture Editor

National Agriculture Week began Monday, and today is National Agriculture Day. Since 1973, National Agriculture Day has been observed on the first day of spring, said Charlene Patton, marketing specialist for the State Board of Agriculture. "Agriculture day is set aside as a day for people in agriculture to celebrate and salute those in agriculture," Patton said. Nationwide, each state has a celebration planned for agriculture day, she said. In Topeka, activities will begin at 10 a.m.

with a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the capital. Those to be present include Gov. John Carlin; Rep. Lloyd Polson, R-Vermillion; Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa; Harland Priddle, state secretary of agriculture; and Jack Beauchamp, president of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture.

"In the first floor rotunda area there will be samples of those agriculture products produced in Kansas," Patton said.

Twenty-three exhibits, with anything from computers to historic farm equipment, will depict the diversity in agriculture. Because it is the state's 125th birthday, an Agriculture Day birthday cake will be on display. The cake is 4 by 8 feet and is made with Kansas agriculture products.

The cake is in the shape of the state and is decorated to show the major production areas in the state.

"The board of agriculture mailed 125 balloons to each community (which) are to be released at noon on Thursday. Each balloon contains a message or prize from the community," Patton said.

Two thousand balloons will be released in Topeka and afterward the birthday cake will be cut and served to those present.

House speaker predicts rejection of Reagan's contra aid package said the administration was ruling out

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Wednesday President Reagan's plan to provide $100 million to anti-government rebels in Nicaragua appears to be headed for rejection, and a White House spokesman said a lastminute compromise was possible.

With a House vote set for Thursday, White House spokesman Larry Speakes compromise on the "fundamentals" of the $100 million package. But he said changes were possible that would delay delivery of military and other aid for up to four months

O'Neill, D-Mass., and a vocal critic of the aid package, said opponents hold a 10-to-15 vote margin. He said there has been "no erosion" despite an intensive personal lobbying campaign by Reagan.

Tuition hike proposal for college excessive

A Board of Regents committee has suggested tuition hikes for regents institutions, including a call to increase tuition at the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine by 25 percent in the fall of 1987. The increase is part of a plan to double tuition in that college during the next four years.

The purpose of the fee increase would be to improve the quality of the vet med programs and to maintain the national strength of the college.

The need to increase tuition in order to avoid a deterioration of quality is inherent in any educational system, but students in veterinary medicine are being asked to face staggering cost increases

In addition, the desire of the regents and the dean of the college to maintain the strength of the program is a valid reason to raise tuition. However, a cost increase of this kind could keep quality students out of the pro-

Students of veterinary medicine will feel the same belttightening effects of the Gramm-Rudman budget cuts as other students. An increase in tuition and a lack of adequate financial aid could be detrimental to the college.

Students in this college also find themselves with little free time in which they might work at part-time jobs to finance their education, due to a necessary, but demanding class schedule.

K-State does have one of the finest veterinary medicine schools in the nation. Students entering into veterinary medicine are aware of the high costs involved in this education, but a tuition increase which doubles fees during the next four years appears to be rather steep.

Corridor budget plan fails to achieve goals the Board of Regents to adjust base budgets for changes in enrollment patterns at the institutions under its jurisdiction, as regents legislative budget analyst Tom Rawson has suggested, is not the best means of determining public higher education budgets.

The "corridor system" is illogical and has reduced the amount of funding for regents schools during the past four years.

The system imposed by the Kansas Legislature in 1982, lacks logic because the annual corridor adjustment uses a compilation of statistics from several fiscal years and is unresponsive to year-to-year shifts in enrollment and costs. The plan was intended to provide a cushion for institutions experiencing enrollment

The confusing method used by shifts, but instead has developed into a program that threatens the quality of state education.

Recommendations have been made by the Council of Presidents' Enrollment Corridor Review Committee to alter the system. The Legislature will probably begin a review of funding of public higher education in June. The corridor system will be a part of that important study.

Institutions of higher education in the state continue to fall behind their peers in faculty salaries and funding for program development. A system that does not adequately protect the quality of education in Kansas is bad public policy and should be amended. Legislators should give consideration to altering the corridor formula.

U.S. meatout groups meet tough adversary of National Agriculture Day. It is ironic that an animal-rights group is making an appeal to consumers today to convince them to steer clear of meat products.

Kansas farm groups are quite upset by the half-baked proposal, put forth by the Farm Animal Reform Movement, to increase awareness of the impact of meat consumption on human health.

The Kansas Farm Bureau said its gut reaction was that supporters of the meatout proposal are "a group of lunatic-fringe crusaders." Beef producers also say the campaign is a prime cut against a depressed sector of the agriculture economy. Kansas will shoulder the burden of the boycott as it is the leading state in beef production.

The animal reform group is, despite its unusual methods, working to get Americans to understand the potential consequences of consuming meat products. That is an admirable cause. The reform group believes

Today is the annual celebration meat adds harmful elements to diets. Consumers should be aware of the human health problems that can result from eating animal fats.

> Although nearly all farm organizations deny that meat increases the chances of cancer and disease, health groups indicate that people consume lean meat and avoid fats.

> It is unlikely that many people will permanently quit eating meat because of a one-day boycott. Its effect will be minimal.

Beef producers will fight attempts by consumer organizations to convince Americans that meat production is inhumane or that meat is unhealthy.

On this day, a day devoted to recognizing the nation's "most basic industry," consumer desire for a juicy filet will not be markedly diminished by a boycott.

Public hearing chance to air views

"A tiny spark of life" is one K-State student's analysis of campus activity this week.

Demonstrations, counter-demonstrations, meetings and media coverage, all centered around President Reagan's proposal to give $100 million in U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan contras, has given the campus a dynamic and forceful quality - a quality rarely seen at K-State, even in the 1960s.

A quiet campus, most conceed, is the reason former President Nixon agreed to deliver a Landon Lecture here in 1970. K-State's "quiet campus" image may be convenient for some people, but for those who hold to the original notion of a university's character, students' lack of political and social activism is disturbing. This week's events are a sign that the university atmosphere of K-State is changing for the bet-

Monday began with a rally supporting aid to the contras which, in the end, turned into a meaningful and enlightening discussion between those favoring aid and those opposing it. Wednesday's rally opposing aid was attended by persons on both sides of the issue. Judging from the attentiveness of the crowd, most students listened with an open mind.

Outside the university community, unfortunately, the willingness of factions to share views and listen to each other's arguments is not so great.

Manhattan citizens and K-State students and faculty who oppose aid to the contras have been active in helping Topekans' organize the "Kansas Citizens Hearing on Central America." The hearing, which is open to the public, takes place Friday in the Third Judicial District Court, Room 403, in Topeka. It will feature oral and written testimony from more than 50 Kansans who have lived in or studied Central America.

Manhattan residents contributing written testimony include Bill Draves, Julie Coates, instructor in continuing education and Lyman Baker, instructor in English. Jan Flora, associate professor in sociology, will serve as moderator for oral testimony at the 10 a.m. meeting.

The panel, which will hear the testimony and issue and opinion, is comprised of outstanding Kansas leaders, including former U.S. Treasurer Georgia Neese Gray of Topeka and Dr. Karl Menninger.

Criticism about the panel will not center around the members' qualifications, but on whether the group is biased. Since panel members have been active in public life, their stands on such issues are fairly predictable. Most probably oppose U.S. policy in Central America.

Thursday, March 20, 1986 - 4

Flora said the organizers made an effort to balance the panel. "There were a number of prominent Republicans we contacted," he said. "I'm not sure of the reasons why they couldn't make it...whether it was logistics. scheduling conflicts or that they just weren't interested." Those contacted include former U.S. Sen. James Pearson, former Kansas Gov. John Anderson and Federal District Judge Richard Rogers.

The hearing will provide an enlightening portrayal of Central America as viewed by Kansans from all walks of life. While it is unfortunate that organizers were unsuccessful in their attempt to balance the panel, the effort can serve as a warning to K-State that a quiet campus is not always best.

If, by age 19 or 20, a student has not learned to have enough confidence in his or her opinions to discuss them with opposing factions, the university has failed to develop that student's capability for critical thinking. The rallies this week show that K-State has done its job with some students.

Nicaragua vote demands foresight

Much has been cussed and discussed concerning the upcoming House vote on aid to the contras - freedom fighters battling growing Communist suppression in Nicaragua. I have studied the situation in Nicaragua and requests for aid to the contras for more than a year now and as anyone who has done a little research will agree, lots of facts can be found to support various positions on contra aid. So how do we decide? We take a step back from Central America and view the situation on a much broader scale.

What is going on in Nicaragua does not remain in Nicaragua's borders. The growth of Marxism in Nicaragua relates directly as a threat to the existence of the democracy in Costa Rica as well as U.S. allies in Honduras and El Salvador. The increasing military buildup of the Nicaraguan military is unprecedented, with the exception of the Nazi buildup prior to World War II. The Sandinistas spend more than 40 percent of their budget on defense. Cuban and Soviet military advisers in Nicaragua number more than 2,000. The Soviets have also provided the Sandinistas with tanks, MiG-21 jet fighters and MI-24 Hind-D attack helicopters. I bring up prewar Germany for a specific reason. Most of the world ignored the huge military buildup Hitler was carrying on in his small country until it was too late for their own countries. Even after Hitler had started his war and had attacked American allies, we had people in our country urging us to stay out of the war and to wait until the war came to our shores. As hindsight tells us, we engaged Hitler before it was too late and before we had blood on our own shores.

Germany appeared as Nicaragua now does, a small country with the largest military in its region. By providing aid to the contras now, we can avoid the growth of Soviet and Cuban Communist suppression before it reaches our borders.

The question of national security is inherent in the question of aiding the contras. Not only is the security of fledgling democracies in Central America a moral responsibility, but our own national security is at stake. Vice President George Bush has warned that if the United States fails to aid the contras, "we run the risk of seeing another Libya develop, a warehouse of subversion and terrorism only two hours by air from the Texas border.

Nearly all foreign affairs experts with democratic interest in mind are calling for aid to the contras. As far back as 1981, Jeane Kirkpatrick called for American action in Central America on behalf of democracy

'The strength of the United States is inextricably and inevitably involved with the defense of freedom in our time. When we protect our national security, we are, in fact, engaging in a morally acceptable enterprise....The defense of a civilized conception of the American national interest is not only morally acceptable, it is, in our time, a moral imperative," she said.

Many Americans are in favor of some sort of aid to the contras, but they feel that the amount Reagan has requested is excessive. It is a lot of money, but history shows that when a president compromises on national security, the effects are often unfavorable. Simply look at the "Bay of Pigs" incident, or Vietnam. If Congress is going to do something that affects American interests, it should go all-out and do it right. Reagan realizes this and portrayed this with his allout effort in Grenada which was at the time another victim of Communist suppression, but now has a newly restored democracy. To summarize the argument of money, it's got to be all or nothing, if something is done it must be done right.

Our congressmen are being given the chance to turn back the ever-rising tide of Communist aggression by voting in favor of the proposed contra aid package. It appears the bottom line on aid to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua depends upon whether the United States is willing to permit an aggressive Communist regime continue its agenda of subversion.

Handgun plan to slow gunslingers

There's a new law on the books in Lawrence. Our sister institution is in a town that is taking steps to correct a problem many towns face - and Lawrence is doing a pretty fair job of it, too, considering the

Lawrence city commisioners passed a new ordinance Tuesday requiring a three-day waiting period between the purchase of a handgun and the delivery of that weapon into the hands of the purchaser. The action springs from the October suicide of a University of Kansas student who purchased the weapon from a Lawrence shop that same day.

The new law requires the 72-hour period be used to ensure the purchaser is at least 21-years-old, not a convicted felon, and, in the words of Lawrence City Commisioner David Longhurst, to give the purchaser a "cooling off" period.

A similar law is on the books in Manhattan. The intent of the law is clear: it allows not only sufficient time to check the bona fides of the purchaser, but also time for emotions to settle. This is a wise move, particularly since in cities without such laws the purchaser fills out a form from the Alcohol, Tobacco and

RICH HARRIS Collegian Columnist

Firearms Commission on which the purchaser states he or she is not a felon, is not insane or mentally unbalanced and is not an escaped convict. The law also prohibits the sale of a weapon to anyone the dealer believes is under the influence of alcohol or drugs. This is a bit of a sticking point, because it allows and encourages weapons dealers to determine if their patrons are under the influence, something trained physicians, law enforcement officers and counselors sometimes have trouble doing. However, again, the intent of the law is good. I oppose "gun control." I believe those who are legally qualified to carry a weapon have the right to do so. Regretfully, the letter of the law in the Constitution is not as clear as the intent.

At any rate, I believe the Lawrence bill does not violate the intentions of the Founding Fathers. Instead, it is a positive attempt to reduce crimes of passion involving handguns. By no means will it eliminate them entirely, but it may help stop spur-of-themoment suicides and murders.

All the same, gun control is not the answer. We have a right to carry a weapon, and Americans will probably defend that right above rights of speech, assembly and free press, because it really hits them where they live. Not that the other rights are secondary. but few people realize their impact as strongly as they do the right to keep and bear arms.

Bravo for the Lawrence City Commission, and the Manhattan City Commission, which took this action long ago. Gun owners need not feel their rights are infringed - indeed. since most gun owners would prefer never to have to shoot anyone, the new law may lessen the need to use their own weapons against someone who should not have one.

Frivolous spending

Re: Becky Martin's column, "Farrell Library receives millionth book," in the March 17 Collegian:

In her column Martin tells us to let the festivities begin. This is indeed an important event, because with one million volumes, Farrell Library is one step closer to becoming a member of the Association of Research Libraries. Membership in the association would bring more respect to both the library and our campus, so acquiring one million volumes and taking this step may well be reason for festivities.

Not so festive, however, is the fact that three commemorative volumes with a combined value of more than $18,000 constitute the last of the million volumes. Realizing that two of these volumes were purchased with donations from the Friends of the KSU Libraries and the KSU Foundation, it still seems absurd to me that the University Libraries alone spent thousands of dollars on a first edition of John Milton's "Paradise Lost."

In my opinion, the thousands of dollars spent on "Paradise Lost" should have been used to make the library more accessible by extending the closing time of the library from 11 p.m. to 12 p.m. during the weekdays.

Then the festivities could really begin, because not only would we have one million volumes in our library, but we would have the time to use them.

Troubling policy

Aid to the contras will help President Reagan in his efforts to preserve world peace, Dan Walter, spokesman for the Manhattan chapter of Americans for Biblical Government said Monday. After reading that statement I decided I had heard it all.

If Dan knew his history better he would realize that giving $100 million to the contras will not bring Nicaragua closer to peace, but rather incite hostility toward the United States and preserve injustice. The most common reason cited for supporting military aid to the contras is that if the United States does not support them Nicaragua will become a communist state.

However, Richard Fagen, professor of Latin American Studies at Stanford University, said the goal of that government is to revitalize capitalism and establish limited state ownership and production. He points out that 80 percent of production remains in private hands.

The administration's claims that Nicaragua is a communist state are simplistic. To believe Nicaragua, a nation no larger than Kansas, half of whose population is under 15 years of age, could threaten the United States is absurd.

I share the view of critics who see American response to Nicaragua as unwise. In post-revolutionary countries like Nicaragua, the United States should adopt a constructive and open policy, based upon sincere diplomatic initiatives; to do otherwise only pushes them toward the Soviet bloc, as U.S. policy did with Cuba in 1960.

If Reagan truly desires peace in Nicaragua, he will end his emotional pleas for aid to the contras and begin to cooperate with the Contadora countries to reach a lasting diplomatic agreement. In addition, the United States must be willing to contribute economic aid to the Nicaraguan

By following such a course of action, the integrity and credibility of the United States will be enhanced, and Nicaragua will have taken steps toward peaceful relations with the United States and neighboring countries.

U.S. biblical forces

Re: Patty Reinert's story, "Supporters of Nicaraguan contras hold rally," in the March 18 Collegian:

I am sure that virtually the entire campus community (and even the town community) is very excited that we now have an organization whose purpose it is to enable "biblical government." I know I am very ex-

Why should such folks be excited? Because the predominant concepts of government in the Bible are justice, righteousness, mercy, forgiveness, grace and love. The Old Testament demonstrates again and again that God forgives Israel and the Israelites for their transgressions. Even when they are thoroughly defeated and dispersed God cares, supports, forgives and loves them, and helps restore them to prominence though always that they may demonstrate God's justice, mercy and righteousness, and not so they may do violence to their enemies. Indeed, one of the great stories of Passover Seder speaks of God's grieving for the Egyptians for they are also God's children.

The New Testament goes even further in its concern for justice, mercy, forgiveness, grace and love. But nowhere are we told to support a government that supports killing and destruction in order to establish justice and mercy. Nowhere are we told to support a government that spends billions on bombs and missiles and billions less on the hungry, the poor, the homeless So, yes, indeed we should all be very excited that we now have folks dedicated to establishing just such a biblical government for justice, mercy, righteousness, forgiveness, grace and love is absolutely what we all need in our government, especially in regard to Central America. Now, if the folks here can only convince their beloved leader to be so biblically inclined we can all rest much easier and not worry about death and destruction of our brothers and sisters in Central America, who are also children of God.

While watching the ABC Evening News Tuesday night reporting from a Sandinista military base, I saw a Soviet-built armored helicopter gunship - complete with guns and rocket launchers - fly over a row of Sovietmade battle tanks.

With the vote on the aid for the contras coming up in Washington, I was surprised that the Sandinistas allowed ABC News to film some of their Soviet might. Apparently the Sandinistas are confident their American supporters will carry the day for them in Washington.

As the Sandinistas become bolder, maybe they will parade their 4,000 Cuban and East Bloc "advisers" for the television cameras. I have seen enough. I support President Reagan on this issue.

Denying contra aid

Of all of the controversies to blow across these plains, the dispute over whether the United States should give financial aid to the rebel fighters in Nicaragua is perhaps the most absurd because it is the easiest to solve.

First, send the contras to the Student Financial Aid Office in Fairchild Hall, which won't give financial aid to anyone. Then take a look at who really needs the money. The United States has enough needy to give the money to, and they aren't necessarily trying to kill anyone.

A couple other social issues could use the consideration as well. For instance, AIDS and other social diseases still are not under control. Why doesn't President Reagan finance some vacations for the patriotic ill, and have them take AIDS to the Sandinistas? They're going to die anyway (as opposed to the soldiers Reagan is bound to send).

This solution would cut down on two problems with less money than is being spent on mistake," in the March 19 Collegian: Change Willie the Wildcat? Now just wait a minute. In these times of major change for the athletic department, one can easily get caught up in the calling for new blood. We've got new coaches, a new athletic director, why not a new mascot? I've got several reasons.

Mascot is just fine

Take a good look at other team mascots and make a comparison. Has anyone yet been able to rival the mascots used by the University of Kansas for sheer ugliness? How about the Iowa State Cyclones' mascot? Tornadoes are always synonymous with red birds, aren't they? What an outfit. Sorry to be so blunt, but has anyone else noticed that the bird possesses the look of eternal constipation?

Let it be known that mascot stupidity is not limited to just the Big Eight. The Ohio State Buckeyes' mascot is one example.

As far as looks go, I think Willie is the Don Johnson of mascots. Scott, you're entitled to your opinion, but any changes designed to upgrade the look of our "plain old housecat" will no doubt result in yet another ridiculous appearing mascot.

Finally, you fail to see Willie's greatest asset. It's the man that makes the Wildcat, not the other way around. Underneath Willie's mild-mannered appearance roars the spirit of a true Wildcat. It's his heart and character that make him shine out among all other mascots.

Ignoring pet issue

As a resident of Jardine Terrace Apartments and co-author of the proposed pet policy that was voted down in the last Mayors' Council, I cannot begin to express my disappointment, frustration and anger.

The mayors are our voice to the Department of Housing and are supposed to represent our views and concerns. After showing that 79 percent of the residents surveyed would not care if their neighbors owned a cat

- a clear majority - not one mayor voted in favor of the new policy.

In the past month and a half we reworked the policy three times and did a survey as the mayors requested - and for what? They allowed us to do all that work and then voted against the results. Why were they not honest enough to vote it down sooner?

While they encourage our participation and thank us for it, they as much as slap us in the face by throwing our efforts out the window. Then to top it off they do not even attempt to come up with a better policy or even take care of the existing stray animal problem that they complained to us about.

If these mayors do not wish to put the time and effort into their jobs to try and establish good policies for all Jardine residents perhaps they should step down and let those of us who care (and are ready and willing to make Jardine a better place to live) have a

Anti-Reagan media

Why is it that every time I read a newspaper I get an almost eerie feeling that every reporter voted for Walter Mondale? Each article is so anti-President Reagan, anti-administration and anti-government that I constantly flip back to the front page and check the name of the newspaper to see if The Moscow Post isn't accidentally being delivered to my house.

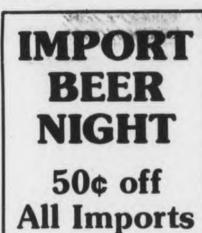

You know, my heart almost bleeds as I read the front page stories of today's newspapers. But I'm one of those rich, warmongering conservatives who thinks Vietnam is just one in the loss column, Nicaragua is just one lousy missile, and nuclear war with the Soviet Union would just really cramp my style.

These are the myths that keep bombarding me day after day from the moment I open the paper until I have to dive for cover behind the couch. No, these myths are not written right there in black and white. They are implied in every article that is even remotely associated with government policy.

Nothing the administration has done or wants to do is good enough for the media.

Whatever happened to middle-of-the-road journalism where only the facts were printed and intelligent human beings are allowed to form their own opinions. Anymore, I picture journalists as drunken drivers who not only drive left of center, but in the left ditch avoiding with remarkable luck any obstacles that might wreck their chance to degrade the government and its policies.

Payton's 60 years as lover of sports have been a 'riot'

By DARIN RUSSELL Collegian Reporter

Jay Payton.

If you are a K-State student, you may not recognize the name right away, but you would probably recognize his voice.

Young K-State sports fans may know his voice from football games as he does the public address announcing. Older fans would recognize his voice from a few years ago when Payton supplied color commentary for K-State basketball.

For nearly 19 years, Payton worked with some of the most well-known play-by-play men in the Midwest. Payton worked with Dev Nelson, Gary Bender (now with CBS), Fred White (Royals' baseball) and Steve Physioc.

But, even older fans would remember Payton as an allconference guard in basketball and a quarterback for K-State's football team in the '40s.

Payton not only remembers the riot that followed the K-State-KU football game last year, but was playing in the K-State-KU basketball game in the '40s which caused a riot.

'A shot went up with time running out and it went in. Everybody thought we had won...the crowd went crazy and rushed onto the floor.'

Jay Payton

Payton said KU had a one-point lead in the game, which was in Manhattan, as K-State brought the ball down the court with time running out.

"A shot went up with time running out and it went in," Payton said. "Everybody thought we had won, but the crowd was so loud, nobody had heard a referee's whistle. He had called traveling on one of our players up court. The crowd went crazy and rushed onto the floor," Payton said. "(K-State's) President (Milton) Eisenhower jumped up on the scorer's table to try to calm down the student body. The referee who made the call barely got away without having his whole shirt torn off.' Payton said he still has a piece of the referee's shirt his father picked up off the floor after the game. Payton said he grew up with a basketball in his hands. "I've been playing organized basketball since the fourth grade," Payton said. "I've been going to

That makes Payton, 63, a sports enthusiast for 60 years. In that time, he has seen a lot of great players play for K-State. Payton said he has seen K-State produce such players as Bob Boozer, Jack Parr, Howard Shannon, Mike Evans, Chuckie Williams, Lon Kruger and Rolando Blackman, just to name a few.

Payton said it seems K-State has always had, "what you would call 'just plain good kids.

'That fact may reflect the good coaches K-State has been fortunate enough to have over the years," Payton said.

Payton has watched such coaches as Jack Gardner, Tex Winter and Jack Hartman develop K-State basketball and has respect for them all. Payton said seeing Hartman retire this year was sad.

"I hated to see Jack (Hartman) retire this year, but I understand the coaching part of it," Payton said. "Once in a while something will suddenly make a guy think, 'I ought to stop this.' Knowing Jack Hartman, it took him a while to make a decision on things, but when he did, it was right now - suddenly. I imagine this was one of those decisions.

Payton can relate to the pressures of being a basketball coach - he has done some of it himself.

'My first year at Manhattan, we had about seven games that either ended in a one-point difference or in overtime," Payton said. "It didn't bother me so much, but I practically had to carry her (his wife Peggy) home from the games.

Payton started coaching at Chapman High School in 1947, after playing two years of basketball and one year of football at K-State. He moved back to Manhattan the next year to coach at Manhattan High School and coached basketball for three years. He decided to quit coaching when his wife Peggy developed an ulcer.

Payton had originally gone to college at Emporia State University to play basketball on an "athletic scholarship" after graduating from Newton High School

"At that time, a scholarship was in the form of a job the college could get you," Payton said. "K-State, KU, Colorado and Wichita State all offered me athletic scholarships, but Emporia came up with an actual job, so I went there.

Payton's college education was interrupted by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Shortly after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Payton joined the U.S. Marine Corps.

During military service, an accident caused Payton to become temporarily blind. He spent more than six months in a hospital, and in 1945 Payton was released from the service on a military discharge and went to K-State.

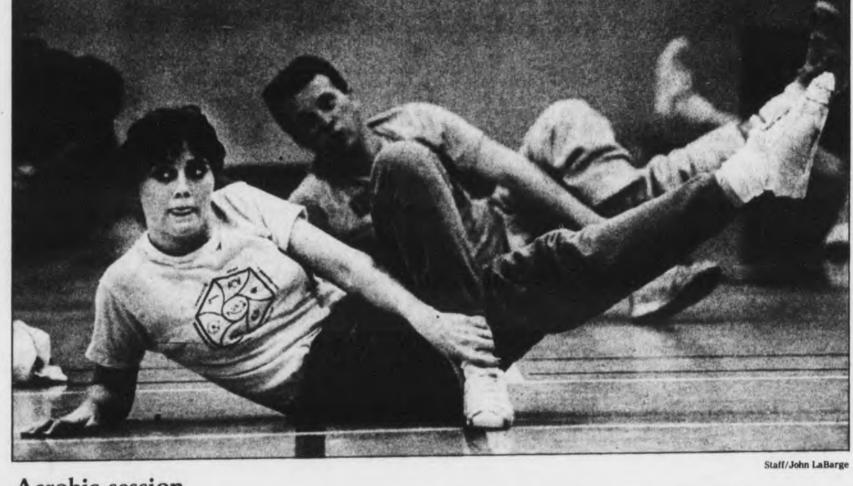

After graduating, he coached for four years and then accepted a job at Farm Bureau. In July, he will have worked there for 36 years. Payton currently serves as assistant sales manager and director of advertising.

Payton said taking the job at Farm Bureau was probably the smartest choice he could have made.

Payton's job at Farm Bureau eventually led to doing color for K-State basketball on WIBW-radio in

'Dev Nelson asked me to do color for him one day," Payton said. "I turned down the offer, thinking it wouldn't be right for a sponsor to do the games. The next year he asked me again. I asked the president of Farm Bureau and got the OK. I ended up doing it (color commentary for WIBW) for several years.

Payton still lives in Manhattan with his wife Peggy. They have three players in three weeks.

Tech's roots planted in SEC

By The Associated Press

Georgia Tech is the odd team out but the sixth-ranked Yellow Jackets will feel right at home Thursday night in the Southeast Regional semifinals of the NCAA basketball championships.

Georgia Tech, 27-6, will play Louisiana State, 24-11, in the second semifinal at the Omni in Atlanta, after third-ranked Kentucky, 31-3, meets Alabama, 24-8.

Also Thursday night, in the West Regional semis at Houston, Auburn, 21-10 (a fourth SEC team), plays Nevada-Las Vegas, 33-4, and North Carolina, 28-5, faces Louisville, 28-7.

On Friday night, in the East Regional semifinals at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., Cleveland State, 29-3, plays Navy, 29-4, and top-ranked Duke, LSU, Kentucky and Alabama are 34-2, opposes DePaul, 18-12, while in Kansas City, Mo., North Carolina State, 20-12, plays Iowa State, 22-10, and Kansas, 33-3, plays Michigan State, 23-7. Like Georgia Tech, Duke, North Carolina and North Carolina State are in the ACC

The Omni isn't Georgia Tech's home court - the Yellow Jackets normally play on campus at the 8,000-seat Alexander Memorial Coliseum elsewhere in Atlanta - but Coach Bobby Cremins says his team still has the home-court edge. "We won't have to travel and we should have good fan support."

Tech has third-team All-American Mark Price - and Cremins no doubt wishes he also had LSU sophomore John Williams. Price leads Tech in scoring with a 17.3 average and Williams is averaging 18.3 points and 8.6 rebounds.

Cremins calls the 6-foot-8, 237-pound Williams "a young Magic Johnson. He is a superstar. He can do anything - rebound, assist, score. He is truly, truly an incredible basketball player. You're not going to be able to stop him. The only thing you can hope to do is control him.'

'I've got to do what's best for Norris'

Norris Coleman is being a patient man. The National Collegiate Athletic Association won't be making a ruling on Coleman's eligibility until April and Coleman says "What's going to happen is going to happen.'

The NCAA's likely options are to make Coleman eligible next year since he sat out at the end of this season, have Coleman sit out a few games as punishment or have the 'Sarge' sit out a year at K-State since he played here while ineligible but make him eligible next year if he transfers.

If the NCAA rules the latter, K-State fans can say "so long" to a man who could have become one of the best players in K-State history.

"I've got to do what is best for Norris Coleman. I can't see myself sitting out a year at my age," Coleman said at the news conference introducing Lon Kruger as the new K-State

The program is definitely at a vital turning point. The final four years of Jack Hartman's reign were downers and if Kruger can't come in and sign some impact players with the next two classes, the great days of the past may never be relived.

Here it is, all the "ifs" that may add up to success for the Kruger-'Cats next season.

The biggest "if" is whether or not the NCAA rules Coleman eligible. Without Coleman the 'Cats will be at best average. At the news conference announcing his hiring, Kruger admitted he will not sign anyone better than Norris Coleman.

The second "if" is whether or not Anthony Smith, a 6-9 center, shows up at K-State next fall. For those who was one of "Sarge's" teammates in the Army and signed with K-State last spring, but the Army wouldn't grant him an early release.

Coleman said he hasn't talked to

Smith recently, but last time he spoke with him, Smith was on his way to be a Wildcat and will do so barring another team getting the edge on signing Smith over K-State between Hartman's resignation and Coleman describes Smith as "a player who can come in and play right away." Some say that is an understatement - Smith is not as good as Coleman, but he is very

A third "if" is whether or not Kruger can land a guard to replace Joe Wright - possibly Steve Henson from McPherson. Henson is a 6-1 super-athlete who is capable of spectacular 360-degree dunks and shooting the ball.

Kruger wants Henson and some from McPherson are saying Henson will be wearing purple in the near don't remember who Smith is, he sign some supporting talent to his cast. A pair of power forwards to beef up the inside would be a fantastic addition. Any power forward.

A final "if" is Kruger's ability to

> A lot of "ifs," but with some luck, Kruger and K-State will be a fine club next season.

> Plus, add to Kruger's additions the previously signed Manhattanite, 6-foot-11 Howard Bonser. Gosh, I hope Bonser pans out just so the K-State fans can hear public address announcer Greg Sharpe say "Howard Bonnzzeeeeer" after a dunk. Way to go Bonzo.

> Now that he is done as a Wildcat basketball player, let's hear it for Joe Wright. The All-Big Eight team chosen by The Associated Press didn't even award Wright an honorable mention.

> A man some are saying is very draftable by the National Basketball Association and a man who was the seventh leading scorer in the conference with an average of 18 points a game deserves some sort of postseason recognition.

You made my second team Joe the AP put the screws on you.

By The Collegian Staff

A K-State mathematician is one of about 10 Americans invited to give a main address at a NATO-sponsored mathematics conference in Amsterdam this week.

Ernest Shult, regents professor of mathematics, will leave today for the five-day conference. This is the third NATO-sponsored mathematics conference at which Shult has spoken. Shult said NATO sponsors about three such conferences per year in mathematics. This conference will feature the top researchers in geometry and group theory.

Shult, whose speech is titled "Remarks on CN Geometries," said NATO invited him to speak at this

Flood plains inhibit industry drawing industries, it cannot be

By STEPHANIE HAUGHTON Collegian Reporter

Problems behind attracting industries to the Manhattan area were outlined for the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board Monday night by Mike Hauser, executive director of the Manhattan Chamber of Com-

The major drawback in finding a location to build an industrial park, Hauser said, is that sites large enough to handle projects lie in the flood plain.

He said industries do not want to be located in a flood plain due to problems in obtaining insurance for such areas. Hauser said even if insurance can be found, the premiums are "extremely expensive.

The current plan of the flood plain has been in existence since shortly after 1951 and attempts to have the plan updated have brought about no change, said Larry Hulse, chief city

Hauser said "the chances of getting the flood plain remapped should not be ruled out. It could happen someday."

Economic development is important to the University and Riley County because it will draw more people to both places, Hauser said.

Hauser said several actions would help the probability of economic development in the Manhattan area while outlining what he thinks should be done to help development.

"If the city doesn't own land, they can't sell it," he said.

He said the city needs to purchase land so it has locations available to offer prospective developers. Hauser added that the land must also be priced competitively, with the proper zoning in place for the proposed industry. In many cases, the land would have to be rezoned specifically for industrial use.

Hauser told board members that land-worth has to be considered by both the land owners and the city.

He said if Manhattan wants to be competetive with other towns in Senate to hear presentations for 1986-87 fund allocations

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will begin hearing five-minute presentations for tentative allocations for the 1986-87 academic year at 7 tonight in the Union Big Eight room.

Senate will also vote on allocating $195.92 from the Reserves for Contingencies account to the KSU Student Planning Association. The group is attending a national conference in April in Los Angeles.

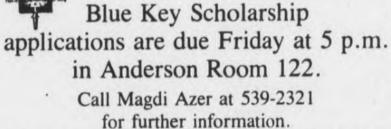

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, will update senate on the progress made in the renovation of Holton Hall.

Senate will consider establishing an athletic fee task force to look into the feasibility of the proposed athletic fee.

Senate will also review the recommendations for at-large positions in the student body president's cabinet, for the Basketball Ticket Sales, Recreation Services and Sports Club such a position or thrust the job onto

University personnel. Thompson pointed out that without the statement the policy seemed vague about who would coordinate the distribution of information.

In the introduction of the draft policy Thompson suggested that razors, toothbrushes and tweezers be dropped from the statement as exceptions to objects which might have needed because it was unlikely that AIDS could be passed through the exceptions. He said the only method of transmission would have to occur from open blood source to open blood source in less than 2 seconds

The committee will meet again next Wednesday to discuss other sections of the policy including standing committees, employment and participation in campus activities.

Once the committee works out problems in the policy it will be sent to Sutton and then to University President Duane Acker's staff, Nolting

Forum to discuss work of convocation speaker Classified

By The Collegian Staff

The work of the co-founder of the San Francisco-based institute for Food and Development Policy will be the subject of a pre-convocation forum at 7:30 tonight in the Union Cottonwood room.

Frances Moore Lappe is scheduled to speak on "Food for a Starving Planet," the fourth convocation speech in the 1985-1986 series, at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

The four University panelists discussing her work at the forum will be Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology; Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design; Meredith Smith, professor of foods and nutrition and Walter Woods, dean of Agriculture.

Lappe, who has devoted her career to addressing the question of why there is hunger in a world with plenty of food, has testified before Congress on agricultural export policy.

Lappe has also addressed the United Nations World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, advised ABC and CBS television on world hunger documentaries and contributed articles to many periodicals.

Lappe has found worldwide mismanagement of agricultural resources, inept and frequently corrupt administration of foodassistance programs and insensitivity by Western nations to the plight of the developing world.

Guatemala's election changes little

By MELISSA BRUNE Staff Writer

The recent election of a democratic president in Guatemala may do little to solve the country's problems, Dr. Enrique Morales said Wednesday in a talk sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

During the speech at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center, 711 Denison Ave., Morales said although he believes the newly elected president, Vinicio Cerezo, has the best of intentions, the military still holds much power.

Morales, a psychiatrist with the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, left Guatemala with his family in May 1981 after he received word from a friend that he was the target of a Social conditions also contribute to the Guatemalan problems, he said. Morales estimates that 65 percent of the population is illiterate and the unemployment rate is 43 percent. Guatemala has a population of about 8 million with a land area about one-third that of Kansas. These factors, combined with a history of military governments, keep his hopes of "real change" for the nation from being realized, he

The last official dictatorship in Guatemala was in 1944, with the first true election occurring in 1945, he said. In that year a civilian was elected president and served four years. The next civilian government to be elected was overthrown in 1954 with help from the Central Intelligence Agency and large U.S. corporations such as the United Fruit Company, he said.

"Since then it has been one military government after another. either through mock elections or coups," Morales said.

Cerezo was elected in November 1985 and took office in January. Morales said the Guatemalan army has pledged to remain in control of the government despite the election.

The activities of the revolutionary movement in Guatemala since 1981 have slowed somewhat, Morales said, but the core movement is still there because the social conditions which create the need for such a movement are still there.

Morales said the new government is not inclined toward violations of human rights, but the government does not have as much power as it should to control such infractions.

'Mishima' relates writer's art, life

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

In his newest film, "Mishima," Paul Schrader has retuned to one of his favorite themes - obsession, a theme that has played a prominent role in his screenplays ("Taxi Driver") and his movies ("Hardcore"). For the title character of this film, the world-famous Japanese novelist Yukio Mishima (played by Ken Ogata), obsession takes the form of the writer's attempts to find a link between his art and his life. Mishima ends up molding his own life as if it were a work of art. Making the movie was a long affair for Schrader. It took him four years to gain the rights to make this film, and even then he had to agree with Mishima's widow's demands that Schrader not depict any scenes from Mishima's marriage, as well as any scenes from his sexual and political life. This leaves some noticeable gaps in the movie, but the gaps are smoothed over by the inclusion of scenes from three of Mishima's

Film Review

This makes the film much more than just a biography of Mishima. The film is broken into four chapters. In each of the first three chapters, Schrader includes a condensed version of one of Mishima's novels. These novels are juxtaposed with scenes from Mishima's own life; thus connections are made between the writer's life and his art. All of this - three novels and biography - clocks in at just under two hours. That means the novels have been pared down considerably. The results are uneven. The first of these novels, "The Temple of the Golden Pavilion" remains very allusive. The second is the best, "Kyoko's House." It's the story of a young actor who becomes the live-in companion of an older woman. The last, "Runaway Horses," gains strength as it is juxtaposed with scenes from Mishima's growing in-

To make the material a little more palatable for American audiences, Schrader has added voice-over narration by Roy Scheider, but the rest humorless. This fills the film with so much angst and torment that rounded character. By the movie's end he is still just as much of an enigma as before. But as the movie nears its end it picks up momenteum. The final scenes as Mishima and his army take over a four-star general's office are powerful. Unfortunately, this is true of only

Jan Flora, associate professor of sociology, criticized the press for failing to report important issues.

"How many of you know that Nicaragua and Costa Rica are negotiating a border patrol? That is an extremely important element on how our representatives vote on contra aid," he said.

Costa Ricans and Nicaraguans, with the support of the Contadora nations and the four nations that back them, are working on the agreement, which is an attempt to avoid future border conflicts, Flora said. Last year, Sandinista forces admitted to border confrontation, he said. "The United States has opposed that agreement - the first step in the process to a regional settlement," Flora said. John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy, said Nicaragua's military forces include 60,000 regular army troops and 40,000 militia wo are not equipped or trained for largescale military maneuvers.

Nicaraguan air force, with its 12 airplanes, is the least developed of all Central American countries except Costa Rica which has no standing army, Exdell said.

"The bottom line is that it is absurd and futile for Nicaragua to attempt to invade another country. It is also an act of suicide because it would call on the United States to demolish them," Exdell said.

The Sandinistas have accepted military assistance from the Soviet Union and Cuba because they have no other choice, Exdell said.

SINGAPORE - Rescue workers digging into the wreckage of the collapsed Hotel New World have recovered 18 bodies and officials said Thursday there was little hope of finding more than the 17 survivors pulled from the ruins in the past four

By The Associated Press

"I don't think there is much chance of anyone else being found alive," said Lt. Col. Fong Yeng Hoi, a Singapore Armed Forces physician.

The last survivor was rescued Tuesday. About 100 people were believed inside the six-story building when it collapsed abruptly just before noon Saturday.

The debris has been cleared almost to ground level. Rescue workers had hoped more people would be found alive when they reached the vault of the industrial and commercial bank branch on the ground floor, because the building fell just before the bank was due to close for the day

Animal rights supporters encourage 'meatout'

By BECKY OHLDE Agriculture Editor

Today is "The Great American Meatout," an event sponsored by a group of animal welfare, or animal rights, supporters encouraging people not to eat meat.

This is the second campaign by the group, said Gordon Hibbard, Kansas Farm Bureau's communication director in Manhattan.

"They tried to have one last year, but it wasn't recognized as well, so this year they enlisted the help of Bob Barker, host of "The Price is Right" and self-proclaimed vegetarian, to serve as the national chairman," Hibbard said.

The group is claiming meat is just as dangerous as tobacco and causes tion are mistreated.

"All of this just flies in the face of what we're (those in agriculture) trying to do in production agriculture," he said. "The meat industry in the largest industry in the state and the production and processing of meat brings $3.9 billion to the

A group helping to promote the meatout said it isn't trying to turn anyone into a vegetarian.

"It's to get people to stop and take a deep breath and consider the consequences of their diets," said Alex Hershaft, head of the Farm Animal Reform Movement in Bethesda, Md., in an interview with The Kansas City

Barker was asked to serve as the national chairman because of his interest in the animal rights movement, Hershaft said.

Hibbard said he believes the issue can and is being handled lightly, but also believes charges by a national personality need to be countered.

"Dietitians see meat as healthy and a primary source of protein. Most reputable dietitians would find the groups accusations wrong," he said. The farm bureau sent a letter to Barker addressing the issue and also sent articles and stories to newspapers around the state.

vegetarians need to take up a meat diet. The issue needs to be addressed," Hibbard said. The subject of the event is not new

"We don't intend to say to meat producers. The industry has been challenged before and will continue to be challenged, he said.

"The group is hanging on to the old myth that beef and pork is fat and also things having to do with additives and drugs. Very few of the scares have been substantiated and if they have then the USDA has stepped in," Hibbard said.

Many weight-controlled diets include pork in the program, he added. The farm bureau sees this event as an attack on an industry already in financial trouble.

"Agriculture is hurting financially, and the beef cattle industry is in serious shape," Hibbard said, "Consumers need to know the meat products provided are safe and healthful.

"We're treating it (the event) lightly, but we're trying to stress some important points," he said.

House defeats Reagan's contra aid proposal

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A sharply divided house, on a 222-210 vote Thursday, defeated President Reagan's plan to send $100 million in military aid to Nicaraguan rebels. The dramatic setback followed two weeks of intense personal lobbying by the presi-

Presidential Spokesman Larry Speakes said the administration will not abandon the fight. "We're gaining converts, and the next battle will bring us victory," he said. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., who led the opposition, promised an April 15 vote in the house.

The setback for Reagan might be temporary since the Senate is scheduled to take up the issue next week. But the vote nonetheless, represented Reagan's most serious foreign policy reversal in Congress.

The Congress initially rejected his aid request last year, but later after Nicaraguan Leader Daniel Ortega paid a visit to Moscow - approved $27 million in non-lethal aid.

Speakes said Reagan will press "again and again until this battle is won, until freedom is given the chance that it deserves in Nicaragua. ...

The American people have begun to awaken to the danger emerging on their doorstep," he said. "And one day in the not too distant future that awareness will come home to the House of Representatives."

The vote followed two days of often bitter debate that ended with O'Neill saying Reagan's plan "takes us further down the road to a situation where our troops will be involved."

House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., responded to O'Neill: "Today, you're wrong, you're wrong, you're wrong....A month from now will be too late because the Communists are already mobilizing for an offensive."

Although the House vote represented a defeat for Reagan's Nicaraguan policy, O'Neill apparently won some last-minute votes by promising a new round of votes on alternative aid proposals on April 15. Reagan is considered likely to win some aid for the rebels at that time.

Sixteen Republicans joined 206 Democrats in opposing Reagan's proposal. Forty-six Democrats, many from southern states, and 164

U.S. agency offers Acker director job

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - University President Duane Acker said Thursday that he is in final discussions with officials of the U.S. Agency for International Development and will soon become director for food and agriculture.

Acker said he has asked that his name be withdrawn from consideration for a high-level position in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Only minor details of his AID mission remain to be worked out, he said.

"I started discussions (with AID) in December, when I was approached about the job. In January, I was asked to hold off any decision until the USDA situation was settled,' Acker said.

Acker, 54, announced in June 1985 that he would leave the University June 30, and bring his 11-year term as president to an end. Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., indicated recently that Acker was being considered for the USDA's No. 2 post.

John Gordley, an administrative aide to Dole, confirmed in a telephone interview that Acker would assume the post. The AID position is not subject to Senate confirmation.

The job requires that Acker focus on work with developing countries to improve the nutritional status and per capita income in these countries. He will be responsible for monitoring overseas AID projects, studying aspects of foreign aid programs and reviewing reseach done by universities and institutions for AID.

"At the time he (Acker) put his name in for the USDA job he was in discussions with AID for the position there," Gordley said.

"We're very disappointed that he withdrew his name. We would like someone from the Midwest, preferably with a wheat background," he said. "I think that's one of the reasons he asked to have his name withdrawn from the USDA

"We couldn't give him any assurance for a job because there are others being considered. He felt comfortable with their offer," Gordley said.

Assisting developing nations in the enhancement of food and agriculture programs is imperative for many countries. Improving the economic stability of developing countries would also provide a significant boost for U.S. agriculture.

When you analyze it, AID really works to contribute to the well-being of other countries, but it really helps U.S. agriculture out because 50 to 60 percent of our production goes overseas," Acker said. "More needs to be done because poor people don't buy much.'

When a nation's nutritional status is improved, along with its standard of living and purchasing power, it is of benefit to agricultural and manufacturing businesses of Kansas as it impacts U.S. exports, Acker

Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, said Acker would be able to use his wealth of agriculture experience in the new

"His track record as an agricultural scientist and experience in international development will certainly allow him to do what he is qualified for," Flinchbaugh said. They were not looking for a politician. They were looking for someone with experience in international development."

The challenge of the job, as an agricultural scientist and head of a major land-grant university, will provide many opportunities for both professional and personal satisfaction, Acker said.

Goldenbaum also noted the advances made in medicine because of space program spinoffs.

"In space we can manufacture a hormone or vaccine for medical purposes," he said. "Word has leaked out that the hormone developed on this latest mission will manufacture red blood cells in the human body, which is the cure for leukemia and half a dozen cancers.

Goldenbaum also talked about future developments for the space program, predicting a space station on which humans will be able to live for months at a time.

"That'll be in your lifetime, not mine," he said. "And I sure envy

Regents to determine replacement for Acker

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - By high noon on Saturday the name of next K-State president - one of three finalists who will be interviewed by the Kansas Board of Regents today and Saturday - will be announced. The regents are scheduled to meet in Overland Park on Friday and begin interviewing the three candidates who remain from an applicant pool of nearly 150 individuals. The man selected by the regents to become the 12th president of the oldest land-grant institution in the United States will replace Duane Acker, who has resigned effective

The finalists are John Campbell, dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign; Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the Universtity of Florida in Gainesville; and Jon Wefald, chancellor of the seven-school state university system in Minnesota. Following interviews with each candidate, the board will discuss the merits of each finalist in executive session and vote at noon Saturday The vote is open to the public. Acker said the University is in a

"no-lose situation" in regards to selection of the new president.

"Two things, the University can't lose with the three finalists - they are all qualified individuals. And the new president can't lose because of the strength of the faculty and students and programs at Kansas State," Acker said at the regents monthly meeting.

'There are plenty of problems and challenges facing the new president to keep him busy - capital improvements, enrollment, federal funding and tight budgets - there are plenty of challenges," he said.

Acker, 54, announced his resignation June 27, 1985. He indicated on Thursday that he would accept a job with the U.S. Agency for International Development. Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and chairman of the 15-member Presidential Search Committee, said there was a "great consensus in terms of the choices" when the committee, appointed by the regents, narrowed its list of candidates to three March 2.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - In a move fraught with tense discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to defer a decision on a proposal allowing The Wichita State University to develop three doctoral programs until the regents can meet with Wichita-based industry

Both K-State and the University of Kansas currently offer doctorates in chemistry and applied mathematics. KU also offers the only doctorate program in geology in the state. Several years ago the regents decided it would try to avoid duplication of programs among the regents' schools in order to better control capital outlays for higher education.

"Doctoral education is enormously expensive because of the equipment that is needed to support it," said Frances Horowitz, vice chacellor for research, graduate studies and public serices at KU, in an interview earlier this week. "It takes years of investment to build excellence in that kind of a program, and the state does not have the resources to make that kind of investment.' John Brealzeale, vice president for academic affairs at WSU, told the regents the programs could be set in motion without harming programs at sister institutions or those currently in place at WSU.

Armstrong said, that of U.S. cities with a population of 250,000 or more, only one city besides Wichita was not served within a 50-mile radius by a university with at least six doctoral programs. WSU currently offers only two doctorates.

"Kansas has not appropriately served the needs of its major metropolitan area," Armstrong said. The state has been neglecting the industrial base of the state, he said.

Soviets accuse U.S. ships of spying

MOSCOW - A Foreign Ministry spokesman on Thursday accused the United States of trying to spy on the Soviet Union when it sent two Navy ships into Soviet waters in the Black Sea last week.

The U.S. Defense Department acknowledged Tuesday that the cruiser USS Yorktown and destroyer USS Caron entered Soviet waters off the Crimean coast on March 13 but said it was "simply an exercise of the right of innocent passage."

However, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Vladimir Lomeiko said at a news conference Thursday, "This was a clearly provocative passage, and not only a violation of the borders of the Soviet Union but also an attempt to conduct espionage against the Soviet Union.'

The Soviet Union sent a formal note of protest to the U.S. Embassy on Tuesday over the incident, saying the ships' movements were "of a demonstrative, defiant nature and pursued clearly provocative aims." However, that note did not accuse the ships of trying to spy.

Lomeiko said Thursday that the Pentagon's explanation of the ships' movements "are totally irrelevant." U.S. Navy vessels periodically enter the Black Sea, which lies along the southern coast of the Soviet Union, the eastern edges of Soviet-allied Romania and Bulgaria and the northern flank of Turkey, a U.S. ally.

Jury finds man not guilty of plot

NEW YORK -- A federal jury Thursday acquitted a Sikh computer expert of plotting to assassinate Idian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, but found him guilty of two lesser charges.

Following 15 hours of deliberations over three days, the jury found Gurpartap Singh Birk innocent of plotting to assassinate Gandhi during a U.S. visit and trying to hire a hitman to kill him.

The panel found Birk guilty of planning a "military expedition" against India in violation of the Neutrality Act, and of conspiring to obtain explosives illegally.

Improvements head Pohlman's priorities

> By JIM LUNDSTROM Collegian Reporter

(Editor's note: This the fourth in a series of stories highlighting University deans. Monday's story will feature David Byrne, dean of the College of Educa-

Making numerous improvements to the College of Business Administration's operation was the main priority for 1985, said Randolph Pohlman, dean of the college.

Pohlman came to K-State in August 1976 as an assistant professor of finance. He became dean of the college in August 1984 in hopes of improving operation of the college. One aim was to increase enrollment in the college, Pohlman said, and it had increased 85 students by fall 1985. Pohlman said one of the reasons for the increase is additional letters sent to prospective students. We've gone from virtually sending few letters to averaging approximately 1,000 per month," he said. Pohlman said the money comes from private donations and from amounts obtained from operating expenses.

Another priority was to become more visible within the state, and Pohlman said the college has achieved this goal through a number of methods.

"The literature we've obtained indicates students are drawn to universities primarily by their perceived reputation of that institution," Pohlman said. "I think in addition to speaking to high-school seniors and juniors. We need to talk to their parents as well as legislators and regents in order to make people aware of what we are all about. I think we've been successful at accomplishing this.'

Increasing the level of funding for the college, Pohlman said, was another goal set in 1985. Funding last year was up 42 percent over the previous year, a substantial increase, he said.

'We all had a part in increasing the level of funding. Students and faculty actually had the opportunity to go out and let people and businesses know about our program," Pohlman said. A major aim was to develop some chaired professorships, Pohlman said. A chaired professorship is one in which money is put into the KSU Foundation to form an endowment. The professor who occupies that chair receives a salary supplement based on the endowment income.

"A chaired professorship gives us the opportunity to bring in people we could not otherwise attract," Pohlman

Pohlman said another way to establish a chair is to have a donor agree to pay that annual amount.

Increasing enrollment in the master of business administration program was also a priority for which Pohlman

'Our MBA program increased from 43 in the fall of 1984 to 88 in the fall of 1985," said Pohlman. "It has increased to 104 for the spring semester of 1986, which shows we have made extensive progress in this area."

Pohlman also said another aim the college established but did not completely reach was refurnishing classrooms in Calvin Hall.

'We have refurnished all but one of the classrooms, so we didn't quite accomplish this goal," Pohlman said. When you set goals, you prioritize them, and refurnishing the classrooms was not our highest priority.

Classroom refurnishing, Pohlman said, will continue in the future along with several new goals.

"A big priority for us in the future is to renovate Calvin Hall. The building is very old and needs a lot of work. I think it's somewhat distracting to the students. The worst problem is that it isn't available to handicapped students," Pohlman said.

The computing lab, now located on the third floor, will be moved to the bottom floor so handicapped students will have access to it, he said.

The student services offices will also be moved to what is now the reading room, Pohlman said. This will allow a more spacious arrangement for incoming students and students who want to make curriculum changes.

Panelists lead discussion on food markets

By LEANNE STOWE Campus Editor

The United States should develop an agricultural economy that depends on markets rather than self-sufficiency, said Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, at a pre-convocation forum Thursday night.

The forum addressed the work of the cofounder of the Institute for Food and Development Policy, Francis Moore Lappe, scheduled to deliver a University convocation at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Four University faculty panelists discussed the work of Lappe, whose topic for the address is "Food for a Starving Planet.

Lapping said farmers have a right to pay their bills, and the United States must consider changes in the Swedish economy when the Swedish government set a goal of self-

He said the government had to make farming attractive.

"They asked the question, 'how do we keep them in ag?" he said. "We must give them a relative income of a Volvo worker. They had this radical notion that they should get a return on their work.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said research proves teaching other countries to produce their own food does not endanger U.S. agriculture exports. In fact, he said, studies show it improves

He said the research of the University in this area doesn't always change economic policy. Lapping said political decisions affect

"The political reality is how the decisions are made. This research is not new, but how it enters the system is a different story," he

Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology, gave several perspectives on the role of women in the economic well-being of the Flora said economic well-being also has to do with population control. When women received some income they started practicing birth control; when men were in total control of economics, the incidence of prostitution went up, she said.

Flora also talked about the fact that one function of the University is to educate other countries about food production. Some believe this leads them to be competitors for exports, but Flora, as well as the rest of the panel disagreed.

We have more in common than in competition," she said.

Meredith Smith, professor of foods and nutrition, also spoke at the forum.

Bill would encourage organ, tissue donors and tissue banks told the Kansas House Public Health and Welfare Committee earlier this week that hospitals should be required to ask relatives of a dead patient whether to allow donation of all or part of that person's body.

If the Kansas Legislature were to pass the bill, the person in charge of a hospital would be required to ask relatives of a dead patient whether they want to allow the donations.

The purpose of the bill is to save more lives by making more organs and tissues available for transplants. The chance of finding a good tissue match between unrelated people is about one in 1,000. Therefore, a large pool of donors is necessary to find the "ideal" match.

According to the National Kidney Foundation, techniques for transplanting kidneys and corneas are currently the most advanced, but progress is also being made in transplanting the liver, pancreas, heart, bone and other tissues.

The Uniform Anatomical Gift Act, the law governing such matters, states that a person age 18 or older may become a donor. Those under 18 must have consent of a parent or legal guar-

> For transplantation, organs must ordinarily be removed within an hour after death. Therefore, efforts to speed up the approval process would be helpful in securing organs for transplants.

> As advances are made to solve the problem of organ rejection, and as techniques for tissuetyping and organ preservation are improved, transplants will become increasingly feasible. However, the procedure of gathering organs often slows the process.

Although the bill may not be well-received, the intent is commendable. Hospital administrators should consider implementing programs which would secure more organs for transplants while providing counseling services for relatives of potential donors.

Media present false view of Korea

Columnist

After reading the articles, "J.C. police provide clues to nationwide ring," The Manhattan Mercury, Feb. 10; "Police track sex ring," The Manhattan Mercury, March 6, 1986; and "Police link crime ring to Koreans," The Collegian, March 7, I felt I should write about Korean women and the attitude of reporters.

As the famous Indian poet Labindranath Tagore called Korea "the land of morning calm," it is a characteristic of Koreans to be very quiet, mild and peaceful. Although Korean history goes back 5,000 years, we have never invaded surrounding countries. Therefore, the general characteristic of Korean people has been formed not only to protect and to endure sufferings but also not to open our minds to others easily. Our ancestors lived in a closed society and family before western civilization was imported to Korea in the middle of the 20th century.

Our Confucian adage was that when children turn 7 years of age, boys and girls should not sit together. Women had to stay home beginning with their adolescence, and to meet, talk, or associate with strange men was strictly forbidden. Women were taught to cherish their chastity most. It is regarded as ideal for them not to marry again even if their husbands die. In a society where it was considered immoral to meet or get to know the opposite sex, it was inevitable that women became inhibited and gradually lost contact with the outside world

Korean customs have changed much due to close and frequent contact with Americans and other foreignors. The change was accelerated by the Korean War in 1950-1953 the background of "M*A*S*H.

Today, Korean immigrants have increased in the United States like many other nationalities. However, according to recent reports, the educational level of Korean immigrants was the highest of all the countries' immigrants. As most Americans know, most Korean immigrants work hard to adjust to the American environment like the Pilgrims

Also, many people have said, "If three Chinese immigrate together, they operate a restaurant: if three Japanese immigrate together, they operate a factory; and if three Koreans immigrate together, they establish a church." It is a natural expression of nationality. Let's think about Manhattan. There are many different international students such as Taiwanese, Japanese, Philippinos and Thailanders. Among them, only Koreans have their own congregation and church, even though it is small. This means that the pursuit of Korean life emphasizes the spiritual life rather than money or pleasure.

As I introduced earlier, most Koreans still have very conservative thoughts about moral and sexual values, even in America. Of course, all Koreans are not conservative. I think a few Korean women might work in massage parlors, nude modeling studios or nightclubs. However, as prostitutes, they cannot be representative of all Korean women. Even though the reporters did not state that all Korean women are prostitutes,

I felt that they implied that many were, and I felt sorry and ashamed.

In my opinion, there are some prostitutes of all ages and in all countries even though the government may prohibit them. However, we cannot call all women "prostitutes" because of a few prostitutes.

The comic drama "M*A*S*H" has been very popular in America. But in fact, the backgound of "M*A*S*H" is very out of date compared to today's Korea. People who have not been to Korea would think Korea uncivilized. depicted Korea more than 30 years ago. In 1988, the uncivilized backgound of 'M*A*S*H" will disappear in your thoughts because of the Olympic Games in Korea. However, how can you erase the impression of the Korean prostitutes? If my Korean ancestors knew about Korean prostitutes in America, they would turn over in their graves because of their descendents'

Finally, a reporter stated that the investigation is "still in its infancy" and "there's so much more that we don't know." Briefly speaking, these are not reliable reports. How could reporters publish this shocking story without having certain evidence? Many Koreans and the Americans married to Korean women have been shocked and staggered by this article, even though the "evidence" is so incomplete. Have the reporters ever thought about the impact of this story on Korean-American families and their children?

A stone which unintentionally passes in the creek can make big waves in the calm waters and can kill fish which peacefully live in the creek. Therefore, reporters have to have responsibilities for their reports, and for the "innocent fish" they may hurt.

AIDS hysteria enters athletics, intramurals

if you are planning to join an intramural volleyball team, watch out for your teammates - they might have AIDS.

A draft proposal on sports participation for people with AIDS, AIDS-related complex and carriers of Hepatitus B will advise those carrying the viruses not to participate in some intercollegiate sports including football, basketball, baseball and several track events.

In intramurals, the proposal suggests carriers should be advised not to participate in "touch football, basketball, softball, baseball, wrestling, boxing, racquetball, squash, handball, volleyball, cross country, track, soccer, rugby, couples in tennis and the high jump or pole vault in field events.'

The only proven means by which AIDS may be contracted other than through semen is through the blood. Proposing that the virus can be transmitted through sports is carrying the issue too far. Suggesting that AIDS can be spread by swinging a baseball bat is as absurd as saying AIDS victims should be advis-

If you play doubles in tennis, or ed not use computer labs for fear of transmitting the disease by touching the keyboard.

> The intent of the proposal is to ensure the players' safety - both the carriers and the other participants. And the proposal states that the carriers would only be advised, not forced, to refrain from participation. This is where the question of confidentiality enters.

Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics could be notified that a team member cannot play, but Tout doubts whether the department would accept such a policy.

If the department did bench a player carrying the AIDS virus, questions would be asked. It would not be long before the sports page of every newspaper turned the "confidential" medical report into a major news

Until AIDS is proven to spread on the athletic field, the AIDS scare should be kept out of the locker room.

Educational crisis starts in colleges

Nearly three years ago the president's committee on education reported that America was reaching an educational crisis. The committee's research focused on grade schools and high schools where concrete factors, such as student test scores and teacher competency, were evaluated to determine the quality of education.

Now we are beginning to see the results of the evaluation in terms of widespread support for state-required teacher testing for certification. Last week's media coverage of the implementation of teacher competency testing in Texas was the most recent example of a growing push for more stringent teacher standards.

Somehow during all of the outcry about low quality education, colleges and universities virtually escaped blame. It's time to pin the tail on this donkey.

We probably all remember the childhood scenario where "not me" was blamed for breaking mom's favorite lamp or "I didn't do it" was guilty of losing dad's wrench set.

As the only child at home, I didn't get away with that too often. My parents knew "not me" was a figment of a guilty conscience, and they punished me for the primary crime in addition to the creating mythical figures. Ancient Greek children would have been thought clever for that. Maybe that is why today I always look for the individual who is most willing to shift blame as the likeliest

One of the guilty parties in the education system is higher education. In 1982 and '83, when grade schools and high schools were examined closely and criticized severely, officials in higher education put their hands on ACT score statistics and pointed to a declining average score as proof that high schools were the culprits in undermining the system. Presidents of universities and colleges at that time were often asked their philosophies about where the education system failed. I don't recall a single university official ever accepting any of the blame on the part of a higher education institution.

As education majors across the nation begin their preparation to become part of the education system, they will look to their trainers for guidance - specifically guidance related to state-required competency tests. If guidance is not forthcoming, or if it is not up to meeting state requirements, accusing fingers will start pointing toward higher education where indeed some of the blame lies. In order to ensure that Americans have the opportunity to get a high-quality education in grade school and high school, colleges and universities will have to change their philosophy away from the juvenile "not me,"

If grade schools and high schools are required to employ teachers who have passed competency exams, it stands to reason that instructors in the higher education environment should also be required to meet basic standards of competency

If the quality of the total education experience is really considered important enough to improve, then all teachers, including college classroom professors, should also be tested.

As policy stands now, individuals who have never taken an education class can be, and often are, instructors at colleges and universities. The result is that noneducators are providing part of the education of future teachers. Perhaps it is time we took a look at the teachers' teachers for some answers concerning the quality of education.

Analyzing the quality of higher education's educators should not be limited to the education departments, however. Because of the wide range of subject matter required to teach in the nation's public schools, the whole of a university is involved in training future teachers so the whole university should be included in the responsibility.

When defining the quality of education, it seems that higher education has excluded itself. To gain the proper perspective on the issue, it is only correct for higher education to include itself as both part of the cause, and a necessary part of the solution.

I have to totally agree with Scott when he says that the wildcat at the KSU stadium looks like a housecat. When the word wildcat is used, the picture that seems to come to my mind is this ferocious and mean-looking alley

Anchorman to lecture on Monday

By The Collegian Staff

Tom Brokaw, "NBC Nightly News" anchorman, is scheduled to deliver the next Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues.

Brokaw's lecture is to begin at 9:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium, according to Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy and lecture series chairman.

Before becoming anchor of "NBC Nightly News," Brokaw was anchor of NBC News' "Today" program for more than five years. He joined the program in 1976. Prior to that, he served as NBC White House correspondent for three years.

During his White House years, he covered the resignation of Vice President Spiro Agnew, the unsuccessful efforts of President Richard Nixon to remain in office and the installation of Gerald Ford as president.

Brokaw's scheduled appearance at the Landon Lecture podium follows a September appearance by Vice President George Bush.

Secretary of State George Schultz is the next scheduled Landon Lecture speaker. He will speak April 14.

Construction begins at MCC

By JEFF STARK Collegian Reporter

While their campus may currently resemble a large parking lot, major changes will soon be evident on the grounds of Manhattan Christian Col-

With groundbreaking ceremonies
Feb. 1, construction has begun on J.
Donald Coffin Memorial Hall. Funds for the new administration and classroom building were contributed by Bertha L. Coffin of Council Grove, the widow of J. Donald Coffin.

David Smale, director of public relations at MCC, said the facility is expected to be completed around June 1, at a cost of "around $1

"The administration and classroom (space) will be able to handle an enrollment of up to 545 students and will definitely help us to recruit more students," Smale said.

Smale said Coffin Hall is to be constructed with pre-cast concrete, significantly reducing construction time and costs. The facility is to be designed to allow expansion if necessary.

A second structure being built on the campus is the MCC Student Service Center. Smale said the center's construction is just getting started due to problems with the weather.

The Service Center is scheduled to provide cafeteria service, a Christian bookstore, a pharmacy, film processing, laundromat, a convenience store, without the sale of pornographic materials or alcohol, and office space. There will a total of 17,000 square feet of business space.

The center's second floor is to contain 24 married-student apartments, with 12 one-bedroom and 12 two-bedroom facilities.

Smale declined to comment on the names of the businesses which will occupy the center because contracts have not been finalized.

"I think the public is wondering how we can be building all of this when we just came out of a foreclosure," Smale said. "We have adopted a policy that states we will not build anything or make any additions or improvements unless the project is paid for."

Theater group offers musical

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK Staff Writer

Hang on to your hats lads and lassies, the enchanting and romantic Scottish fantasy "Brigadoon" is coming to McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday.

"Brigadoon," with book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner and music by Frederick Loewe, will be performed by Music Theatre Group of New York City.

Lerner and Loewe have made their mark in the pages of successful musical productions. In addition to "Brigadoon" they have had hits including "Paint Your Wagon," "My Fair Lady," "Gigi" and "Camelot."

"Brigadoon" first opened on Broadway in 1947 and continued for 581 performances. It captured the attention of many critics who questioned if Lerner had used an old legend from Scotland. Although he had been quite fond of Scotland, Lerner denied the allegation. Despite the questioning critics, "Brigadoon" won the New York Critics Circle Award for Best Musical that same year.

Saturday's performance, directed by William Wesbrooks, promises a thrilling combination of romance, comedy and fantasy in this marvelous adventure of two young men, Tommy Albright and Jeff Douglas, who stumble upon the magical land of Brigadoon, a Scottish town untouched by time in a tranquil and simple world, which comes to life but once a century.

While in Brigadoon, Tommy falls in love with Fiona MacLaren and realizes he must make a decision: whether to remain in peaceful Brigadoon with Fiona or return to the real world.

Musical favorites have made their way into collections over the years, among them "Almost Like Being In Love," "Heather on the Hill," and "From This Day On."

The magnificence of Mitzi Maxwell's choreography will keep the audience toe-tapping for the entire evening with vigorous Highland flings and traditional Scottish folk dances, culminating with an exciting sword dance.

The Music Theatre Group, which has traveled some 30,000 miles and toured over 70 cities in the United States and Canada, uses two 45-foot tractor-trailers, carrying scenery, lighting equipment, costumes, a 28-foot mobile home for the six technical supervisors and a motor coach for the 39 cast members of the company.

Regents OK bidding for new science hall

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — With little discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to approve contract documents and authorize the University to receive construction bids on the proposed $10.3 million chemistry and biochemistry building.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the project has been long in coming, but the native stone building will be a quality facility that meets the needs of the University.

"At long last the chemistry and biochemistry building at Kansas State is ready to go out for bid," Corman told the regents. "I think that President (Duane) Acker may like to lead us all in cheering about this."

Funding for the first phase of the project has been appropriated by Kansas Legislature and will be allocated during the next three years. Two-thirds of the structure will belong to the Department of Chemistry and the remaining portion to the Department of Biochemistry.

The new building wil be located south of King Hall and east of Willard Hall. King and Willard house existing chemistry classrooms and offices.

Corman recommended approval of the design plans and said the new four-story building complies with program document requirements. The project could be bid during the third week of April, said Vince Cool, university facilities architect.

"I am very pleased to go forward with the project. We have a great need for it and the project has been in the planning stages for a number of years," Acker

Acker said the task of coordinating the design was a difficult assignment. The architectural firm of Knight & Remmele of Topeka succeeded in designing a facility that goes well with the divergent architectural styles surrounding the site, he said.

"Dickens Hall was built near the turn of the century, Willard Hall during the Depression and King Hall in the late '60s. I feel like the architect has done a good job," Acker said.

The centerline of the front entrance for the new facility will be in line with the Willard front entrance. Existing greenhouses on the proposed site will be demolished by the contractor. Cool estimates construction on the first phase of the project could be finished in the fall of 1988.

The building's floor design allows for an entrance and elevator lobby on the west and a double-corridor plan flanked by laboratories on each side. A typical floor contains about 14 laboratories and 11 offices.

The architect's and engineer's fees amount to $570,000, movable equipment costs add up to $500,000 and construction costs total more than $8.7 million. A contingency of $440,000 and other costs of $100,000 bring the total to $10.3 million.

The Legislature has not appropriated funds for the second phase, Cool said. The remodeling of Seaton Hall and the second phase of Throckmorton Hall are higher priorities, he said.

Tom Brokaw, "NBC Nightly News" anchorman, is scheduled to deliver the next Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues.

Brokaw's lecture is to begin at 9:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium, according to Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy and lecture series chairman.

Before becoming anchor of "NBC Nightly News," Brokaw was anchor of NBC News' "Today" program for more than five years. He joined the program in 1976. Prior to that, he served as NBC White House correspondent for three years.

During his White House years, he covered the resignation of Vice President Spiro Agnew, the unsuccessful efforts of President Richard Nixon to remain in office and the installation of Gerald Ford as president.

Brokaw's scheduled appearance at the Landon Lecture podium follows a September appearance by Vice President George Bush.

Secretary of State George Schultz is the next scheduled Landon Lecture speaker. He will speak April 14.

With groundbreaking ceremonies Feb. 1, construction has begun on J. Donald Coffin Memorial Hall. Funds for the new administration and classroom building were contributed by Bertha L. Coffin of Council Grove. the widow of J. Donald Coffin.

classroom (space) will be able to handle an enrollment of up to 545 students and will definitely help us to recruit more students," Smale said.

Smale said Coffin Hall is to be constructed with pre-cast concrete, significantly reducing construction time and costs. The facility is to be designed to allow expansion if necessary.

A second structure being built on the campus is the MCC Student Service Center. Smale said the center's construction is just getting started due to problems with the weather.

The Service Center is scheduled to provide cafeteria service, a Christian bookstore, a pharmacy, film processing, laundromat, a conve-

"The administration and nience store, without the sale of pornographic materials or alcohol, and office space. There will a total of 17,000 square feet of business space. The center's second floor is to contain 24 married-student apartments, with 12 one-bedroom and 12 twobedroom facilities.

Smale declined to comment on the names of the businesses which will occupy the center because contracts have not been finalized.

"I think the public is wondering how we can be building all of this when we just came out of a foreclosure," Smale said. "We have adopted a policy that states we will not build anything or make any additions or improvements unless the project is paid for."

Theater group offers musical

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK Staff Writer

Hang on to your hats lads and lassies, the enchanting and romantic Scottish fantasy "Brigadoon" is coming to McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday.

'Brigadoon," with book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner and music by Frederick Loewe, will be performed by Music Theatre Group of New York City.

Lerner and Loewe have made their mark in the pages of successful musical productions. In addition to "Brigadoon" they have had hits including "Paint Your Wagon," "My Fair Lady," "Gigi" and "Camelot."

"Brigadoon" first opened on Broadway in 1947 and continued for 581 performances. It captured the attention of many critics who questioned if Lerner had used an old legend from Scotland. Although he had been quite fond of Scotland, Lerner denied the allegation. Despite the questioning critics, "Brigadoon" won the New York Critics Circle Award for Best Musical that same year.

Saturday's performance, directed by William Wesbrooks, promises a thrilling combination of romance, comedy and fantasy in this marvelous adventure of two young men, Tommy Albright and Jeff Douglas, who stumble upon the magical land of Brigadoon, a Scottish town untouched by time in a tranguil and simple world, which comes to life but once a century. While in Brigadoon, Tommy falls in love with Fiona MacLaren and realizes he must make a decision: whether to remain in peaceful Brigadoon with Fiona or return to the real world.

Musical favorites have made their way into collections over the years, among them "Almost Like Being In Love," "Heather on the Hill," and "From This Day On."

The magnificence of Mitzi Maxwell's choreography will keep the audience toe-tapping for the entire evening with vigorous Highland flings and traditional Scottish folk dances, culminating with an exciting sword dance.

The Music Theatre Group, which has traveled some 30,000 miles and toured over 70 cities in the United States and Canada, uses two 45-foot tractor-trailers, carrying scenery, lighting equipment, costumes, a 28-foot mobile home for the six technical supervisors and a motor coach for the 39 cast members of the company.

Regents OK bidding for new science hall

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - With little discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to approve contract documents and authorize the University to receive construction bids on the proposed $10.3 million chemistry and biochemistry building.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the project has been long in coming, but the native stone building will be a quality facility that meets the needs of the University.

"At long last the chemistry and biochemistry building at Kansas State is ready to go out for bid,' Corman told the regents. "I think that President (Duane) Acker may like to lead us all in cheering about this.

Funding for the first phase of the project has been appropriated by Kansas Legislature and will be allocated during the next three years. Two-thirds of the structure will belong to the Department of Chemistry and the remaining portion to the Department of Biochemistry

The new building wil be located south of King Hall and east of Willard Hall. King and Willard house existing chemistry classrooms and offices.

Corman recommended approval of the design plans and said the new four-story building complies with program document requirements. The project could be bid during the third week of April, said Vince Cool, university facilities architect.

"I am very pleased to go forward with the project. We have a great need for it and the project has been in the planning stages for a number of years," Acker

Acker said the task of coordinating the design was a difficult assignment. The architectural firm of Knight & Remmele of Topeka succeeded in designing a facility that goes well with the divergent architectural styles surrounding the site, he said.

"Dickens Hall was built near the turn of the century, Willard Hall during the Depression and King Hall in the late '60s. I feel like the architect has done a good job," Acker said.

The centerline of the front entrance for the new facility will be in line with the Willard front entrance. Existing greenhouses on the proposed site will be demolished by the contractor. Cool estimates construction on the first phase of the project could be finished in the fall of 1988

The building's floor design allows for an entrance and elevator lobby on the west and a double-corridor plan flanked by laboratories on each side. A typical floor contains about 14 laboratories and 11 offices.

The architect's and engineer's fees amount to $570,000, movable equipment costs add up to $500,000 and construction costs total more than $8.7 million. A contingency of $440,000 and other costs of $100,000 bring the total to $10.3 million.

The Legislature has not appropriated funds for the second phase. Cool said. The remodeling of Seaton Hall and the second phase of Throckmorton Hall are higher priorities, he said.

Elvis Costello

breaks from

It's back to basics for The Costello Show. No longer shall Declan McManus be hiding behind the angry persona of Elvis Costello. On "King of America," his 11th album, McManus/Costello has stripped his music down to bare bones, much as Bruce Springsteen did on his "Nebraska" album.

If it were up to McManus alone, the album would not contain a single reference to the Costello image. The temporary group title, The Costello Show, is being used to please his record company.

Those familiar with McManus' earlier music will note he has cast aside many of the nuances of pop, and retained the word play and innovative musical structures for which he has become known.

With the help of T-Bone Burnett's production, the influences of Bob Dylan, Patsy Cline, Nat King Cole and Elvis Presley come out strong and positive. On most of the best songs, "American Without Tears" and "The Big Light," McManus is backed by various musicians, including some of Presley's TCB band members. McManus' long-time backup band, the Attractions, appears on only one of his more musically and lyrically difficult songs, "Suit of Lights." When the Attractions' keyboardist Steve Nieve combines efforts with Burnett's base playing on "Jack of All Parades," the album displays one of its greatest gems.

As with McManus' previous albums, there is an element of risk in the writing or production of many of the songs, as in "Chocolate Town," when he tries to push his voice past its limits. It is the successful risks he takes that make so many of the songs delightful.

Overall, "The King of America" is enjoyable and interesting. This album is probably best compared to McManus' obscure albums, "Almost Blue" and "Imperial Bedroom." Those emotionally packed records were produced with little concern for pop culture.

Regents OK bidding for new science hall

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - With little discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to approve contract documents and authorize the University to receive construction bids on the proposed $10.3 million chemistry and biochemistry building.

he need to create, to interpret life and communicate it to others drives an artist, no matter what the medium - paint, clay, film, the human body.

Six people, each with his or her own desire to communicate, have chosen the theater as the platform from which to communicate. Among them are three actors, a lighting designer, a makeup artist and a stage manager, each intent on developing his or her craft. As they approach graduation, Tom Overmyer, Craig Stout, Kelly Wondra, Cindy Baker, Susanne Leipold and Jeff Childs discuss where they plan to go once the lights dim and their college days fade to black.

TOM OVERMYER

Full of enthusiasm for his field, Tom Overmyer is ready to head for the big time. Overmyer plans to move to New York or Chicago and start auditioning.

"All my friends are walking around in their suits, going to their interviews," Overmyer said. "It makes me wish I were one of them because they're basically guaranteed a job, but I don't like the 9-to-5 scene.

Overmyer has performed in eight shows at K-State, including "Look Back in Anger," "True West" and "Death of a Salesman."

During the summer of 1984, Overmyer faced his biggest stretch as an actor, his portrayal of Lee, a main character in the Summer Repertory Theatre production of "True West."

"The role I portrayed in 'True West' was difficult because of the physical changes I had to make," Overmyer said. "I gained 30 pounds for the part, which was easy to gain but very hard to lose.'

During spring break Overmyer auditioned at the Mid-America Theatre Conference in Minneapolis. In a period of two days, between 200 and 300 people auditioned before 25 representatives of theater companies across the United States.

"It was more terrifying than waiting outside the dentist's office when you're in grade school," Overmyer said. "We were given two minutes to audition in a cattle-call situation - everyone is given a time and just walks in, says his name, gives his music to the accompanist and starts.

"I did well. I got six call backs and four of them look real promising. I auditioned with an original monologue and sang 16 bars of "I Got Although Overmyer likes to perform in musicals, his real love is drama on stage.

CRAIG STOUT

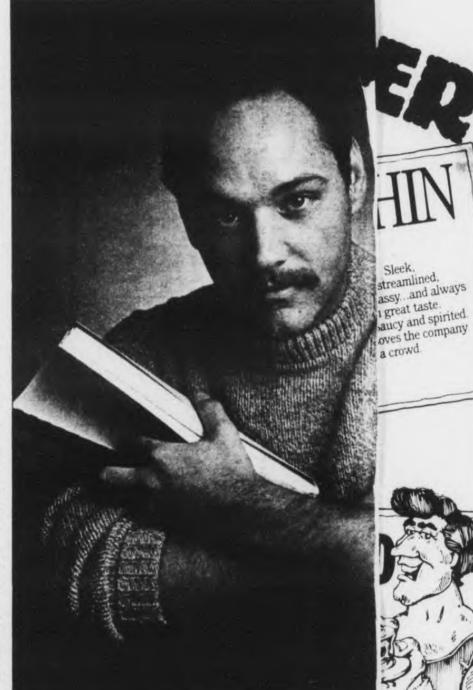

The future has a lot in store for Craig Stout, and it will all begin in Dallas.

"As an acting student, I feel like if I'm not going to New York or Hollywood, I should try to make it in film," Stout said. "Dallas and Chicago are the next step down from New York and Hollywood. Film brings you so much closer to the audience, with eye movements and gestures that can't be captured on stage. But I'd sure like to do Broadway."

Stout recently was hired by Manhattan's newest radio station, KQLA-FM, as a disc jockey, sales representative and also has the prestigious honor of portraying the station's mascot, the Q-Roo.

"I like radio. That's probably where I'll get my start," said Stout. "I have a decent background in both radio and theater. They both involve performing."

"My character is in her late 50s, upper-class, reserved and during the trial she gains a whole new understanding about her daughter (the main character) and their relationship," Wondra said. "This theater (Nichols Theatre) is the perfect environment for this type of play."

During spring break Wondra visited London and attended several plays, and the experience refreshed her outlook on the theater.

"In England their approach to theater is very different than ours here in the United States," Wondra said. "Here, people on stage can either dance, act or sing. Over there, most of them can do it all. Now I know what I have to strive for."

Anchorman to lecture on Monday

By The Collegian Staff

Tom Brokaw, "NBC Nightly News" anchorman, is scheduled to deliver the next Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues.

Brokaw's lecture is to begin at 9:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium, according to Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy and lecture series chairman.

Before becoming anchor of "NBC Nightly News," Brokaw was anchor of NBC News' "Today" program for more than five years. He joined the program in 1976. Prior to that, he served as NBC White House correspondent for three years.

During his White House years, he covered the resignation of Vice President Spiro Agnew, the unsuccessful efforts of President Richard Nixon to remain in office and the installation of Gerald Ford as president.

Brokaw's scheduled appearance at the Landon Lecture podium follows a September appearance by Vice President George Bush.

Secretary of State George Schultz is the next scheduled Landon Lecture speaker. He will speak April 14.

With groundbreaking ceremonies Feb. 1, construction has begun on J. Donald Coffin Memorial Hall. Funds for the new administration and classroom building were contributed by Bertha L. Coffin of Council Grove, the widow of J. Donald Coffin.

David Smale, director of public relations at MCC, said the facility is expected to be completed around June 1, at a cost of "around $1

"The administration and classroom (space) will be able to handle an enrollment of up to 545 students and will definitely help us to recruit more students," Smale said.

Smale said Coffin Hall is to be constructed with pre-cast concrete, significantly reducing construction time and costs. The facility is to be designed to allow expansion if necessary.

A second structure being built on the campus is the MCC Student Service Center. Smale said the center's construction is just getting started due to problems with the weather.

The Service Center is scheduled to provide cafeteria service, a Christian bookstore, a pharmacy, film processing, laundromat, a convenience store, without the sale of pornographic materials or alcohol, and office space. There will a total of 17,000 square feet of business space.

The center's second floor is to contain 24 married-student apartments, with 12 one-bedroom and 12 twobedroom facilities.

Smale declined to comment on the names of the businesses which will occupy the center because contracts have not been finalized.

"I think the public is wondering how we can be building all of this when we just came out of a foreclosure," Smale said. "We have adopted a policy that states we will not build anything or make any additions or improvements unless the project is paid for."

Regents OK bidding for new science hall

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - With little discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to approve contract documents and authorize the University to receive construction bids on the proposed $10.3 million chemistry and biochemistry building.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the project has been long in coming, but the native stone building will be a quality facility that meets the needs of the University.

"At long last the chemistry and biochemistry building at Kansas State is ready to go out for bid," Corman told the regents. "I think that President (Duane) Acker may like to lead us all in cheering about this.

Funding for the first phase of the project has been appropriated by Kansas Legislature and will be allocated during the next three years. Two-thirds of the structure will belong to the Department of Chemistry and the remaining portion to the Department of Biochemistry

The new building wil be located south of King Hall and east of Willard Hall. King and Willard house existing chemistry classrooms and offices.

Corman recommended approval of the design plans and said the new four-story building complies with program document requirements. The project could be bid during the third week of April, said Vince Cool, university facilities architect.

"I am very pleased to go forward with the project. We have a great need for it and the project has been in the planning stages for a number of years," Acker said. Acker said the task of coordinating the design was a difficult assignment. The architectural firm of Knight & Remmele of Topeka succeeded in designing a facility that goes well with the divergent architectural styles surrounding the site, he said.

"Dickens Hall was built near the turn of the century, Willard Hall during the Depression and King Hall in the late '60s. I feel like the architect has done a good job," Acker said.

The centerline of the front entrance for the new facility will be in line with the Willard front entrance. Existing greenhouses on the proposed site will be demolished by the contractor. Cool estimates construction on the first phase of the project could be finished in the fall of 1988.

The building's floor design allows for an entrance and elevator lobby on the west and a double-corridor plan flanked by laboratories on each side. A typical floor contains about 14 laboratories and 11 offices.

The architect's and engineer's fees amount to $570,000, movable equipment costs add up to $500,000 and construction costs total more than $8.7 million. A contingency of $440,000 and other costs of $100,000 bring the total to $10.3 million.

The Legislature has not appropriated funds for the second phase, Cool said. The remodeling of Seaton Hall and the second phase of Throckmorton Hall are higher priorities, he said.

Regents OK bidding for new science hall

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - With little discussion, the Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to approve contract documents and authorize the University to receive construction bids on the proposed $10.3 million chemistry and biochemistry building.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the project has been long in coming, but the native stone building will be a quality facility that meets the needs of the University.

"At long last the chemistry and biochemistry building at Kansas State is ready to go out for bid," Corman told the regents. "I think that President (Duane) Acker may like to lead us all in cheering about this.

Funding for the first phase of the project has been appropriated by Kansas Legislature and will be allocated during the next three years. Two-thirds of the structure will belong to the Department of Chemistry and the remaining portion to the Department of Biochemistry

The new building wil be located south of King Hall and east of Willard Hall. King and Willard house existing chemistry classrooms and offices.

Corman recommended approval of the design plans and said the new four-story building complies with program document requirements. The project could be bid during the third week of April, said Vince Cool, university facilities architect.

"I am very pleased to go forward with the project. We have a great need for it and the project has been in the planning stages for a number of years," Acker

Acker said the task of coordinating the design was a difficult assignment. The architectural firm of Knight & Remmele of Topeka succeeded in designing a facility that goes well with the divergent architectural styles surrounding the site, he said.

"Dickens Hall was built near the turn of the century, Willard Hall during the Depression and King Hall in the late '60s. I feel like the architect has done a good job," Acker said.

The centerline of the front entrance for the new facility will be in line with the Willard front entrance. Existing greenhouses on the proposed site will be demolished by the contractor. Cool estimates construction on the first phase of the project could be finished in the fall of 1988.

The building's floor design allows for an entrance and elevator lobby on the west and a double-corridor plan flanked by laboratories on each side. A typical floor contains about 14 laboratories and 11 offices.

The architect's and engineer's fees amount to $570,000, movable equipment costs add up to $500,000 and construction costs total more than $8.7 million. A contingency of $440,000 and other costs of $100,000 bring the total to $10.3 million.

The Legislature has not appropriated funds for the second phase, Cool said. The remodeling of Seaton Hall and the second phase of Throckmorton Hall are higher priorities, he said.

Anchorman to lecture on Monday

By The Collegian Staff

Tom Brokaw, "NBC Nightly News" anchorman, is scheduled to deliver the next Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public

Brokaw's lecture is to begin at 9:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium, according to Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy and lecture series chairman.

Before becoming anchor of "NBC Nightly News," Brokaw was anchor of NBC News' "Today" program for more than five years. He joined the program in 1976. Prior to that, he served as NBC White House correspondent for three years.

During his White House years, he covered the resignation of Vice President Spiro Agnew, the unsuccessful efforts of President Richard Nixon to remain in office and the installation of Gerald Ford as president.

Brokaw's scheduled appearance at the Landon Lecture podium follows a September appearance by Vice President George Bush.

Secretary of State George Schultz is the next scheduled Landon Lecture speaker. He will speak April 14.

Hang on to your hats lads and lassies, the enchanting and romantic Scottish fantasy "Brigadoon" is coming to McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday.

"Brigadoon," with book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner and music by Frederick Loewe, will be performed by Music Theatre Group of New York City.

Lerner and Loewe have made their mark in the pages of successful musical productions. In addition to "Brigadoon" they have had hits including "Paint Your Wagon," "My Fair Lady," "Gigi" and "Camelot."

"Brigadoon" first opened on Broadway in 1947 and continued for

581 performances. It captured the attention of many critics who questioned if Lerner had used an old legend from Scotland. Although he had been quite fond of Scotland, Lerner denied the allegation. Despite the questioning critics, "Brigadoon" won the New York Critics Circle Award for Best Musical that same year. Saturday's performance, directed by William Wesbrooks, promises a thrilling combination of romance, comedy and fantasy in this marvelous adventure of two young men, Tommy Albright and Jeff Douglas, who stumble upon the magical land of Brigadoon, a Scottish town untouched by time in a tranquil and simple world, which comes to life but once a century. While in Brigadoon, Tommy falls in love with Fiona MacLaren and realizes he must make a decision: whether to remain in peaceful Brigadoon with Fiona or return to the real world.

Musical favorites have made their way into collections over the years, among them "Almost Like Being In Love," "Heather on the Hill," and "From This Day On."

The magnificence of Mitzi Maxwell's choreography will keep the audience toe-tapping for the entire evening with vigorous Highland flings and traditional Scottish folk dances, culminating with an exciting sword dance.

The Music Theatre Group, which has traveled some 30,000 miles and toured over 70 cities in the United States and Canada, uses two 45-foot tractor-trailers, carrying scenery, lighting equipment, costumes, a 28-foot mobile home for the six technical supervisors and a motor coach for the 39 cast members of the company.

Forensics team faces final chance to qualify events for competition

By MARCIA SULLIVAN Collegian Reporter

With the national tournament around the corner, speech and drama students on the forensics team are working toward final national qualification at a "last chance" tournament Saturday at Iowa State University, Ames.

"This particular tournament is crucial to the team because this is our last chance to pick up additional events to take to the national tournament." said Lynne Ross, instructor of speech and director of forensics.

Ross said getting more events qualified would be neccessary if the team has any hope of placing among the top 10 teams in the nation. The American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament is April 11 through 14 at the University of Texas, Arlington. Ross said to qualify for nationals "students must show consistent excellence in three tournaments in collegiate competition.'

K-State's team has five members who qualify. They are: Angela O'Hara, senior in journalism and mass communications; Marcia Sullivan, senior in journalism and mass communications; Trudy Burtis, senior in journalism and mass communications; Jon Mertz, junior times when practicing a speech for in speech education; and Brad Atchison, sophomore in general.

Four members are also attending the Iowa State tournament in hopes of geting other events qualified. Ross said there could be 20 to 25 schools attending, and this has caused the team stress.

"We've been working this week at using stress positively so the students can deal more effectively with nervous anticipation of their last chance to qualify," Ross said.

The Iowa State tournament not only serves as a qualifier, but is necessary to maintain the team's preparedness for nationals, said David Dunlap, assistant forensics coach. He said one of the primary benefits of going ment was to get final feedback from other coaches

'There are less than four weeks before nationals and we must keep our students' skills honed to a keen edge," Dunlap said. "There are

KU to face Spartans in NCAA

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - They're the same five who started for Kansas in last year's NCAA Tournament, but they're armed with a powerful new weapon.

It's called man-to-man defense, and it's something very near and dear to the heart of Coach Larry

When it's played right, a man-toman defense is the perfect complement to fast break offense KU loves to run. It gives a team a chance to control the tempo of a game. And it is a major reason the Jayhawks are ranked No. 2 in the nation and seeded No. 1 in the Midwest Regional.

When Brown left the National Basketball Association's New Jersey Nets for KU three years ago in one of his notoriously frequent job changes, much was made about the lack of quickness he supposedly found.

'These guys can't play Larry Brown's style of fast-break offense and man-to-man defense," the knowledgeable insiders said to each

According to at least one theory popular at the time, Brown would limp along as best he could until an entirely new cast of characters was brought in, kids with enough speed and quickness to play Larry Brown basketball.

Brown's first two years gave evidence to support that theory. Youthful and talented, the Jayhawks won more than 20 games each season and got NCAA bids. But they played a zone defense almost exclusively. But Brown, without harping on it publicly, kept drilling them daily on the way to play the man-to-man.

Each year with their zone, they finished second to Oklahoma in the Big Eight race and failed to get past the second round of the NCAA.

But things are different now. Four of the starting five, including three seniors who greeted Brown when he took the job three years ago, are 1,000-point career scorers. The fifth is a junior point guard who has smashed the school record for

And all five play an aggressive, tormenting man-to-man defense which has helped them post a Big Eight-record 33-3 mark going into Friday night's 'lidwest semifinal against Michigan State

Danny Manning, KU's multitalented sophomore, recalls that last year's team played a zone defense almost exclusively while working on man-to-man in practice. This year, Brown decided the time had come for his team to abandon the zone

"Last year we had to play almost a total zone," said Manning. "But this year we've worked very hard at man-to-man, and I think we can go out and defend anybody man-to-man."

In lop-sided victories over Temple and North Carolina A&T in the first two rounds of the NCAA Tourney, the Jayhawks made full use of their new defensive scheme.

Baseball team back in action today

By DAVID SVOBODA Editor

Seven days and three rainouts later, the K-State baseball team will swing back into action today, hosting Fort Hays State in a doubleheader scheduled for a 2 p.m. start at Frank Myers Field. The games will be seven innings each.

The Wildcats have been idle since March 14, when they completed a nine-day, nine-game trip to Mississippi and Louisiana. K-State currently sports a 10-8 record.

Fort Hays State, which enters the double-header with a record of 10-1, is coached by K-State graduate Vern Henricks. The National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics team posted a 45-21 record in 1985, Henricks' sixth year at the K-State Coach Gary Vaught isn't taking the Tigers lightly, although he thinks his club has the edge on Fort Hays State because of the schedule the Wildcats have played to this point.

"We've played some people in the South that could play," Vaught said. "We've already faced 10 Division I (the largest division in the National Collegiate Athletic Association) schools, so we should be ready for just about anything."

K-State will send Scott Lichlyter and Robby Guinn to the mound in the double-header. Lichlyter, a senior from Derby, has a record of 2-2 and leads the K-State starting staff with a 2.33 earned run average.

Guinn currently is 2-1 on the spring season. The senior from Jay, Okla., has 13 strikeouts in 161/3 innings pitched. Guinn owns the only shutout thrown by a K-State pitcher thus far this spring, a 3-0 win over Lamar in Beaumont, Texas, on Junior catcher Jeff Turtle leads the Wildcat offensive attack. Turtle is currently 8th in the nation in hitting with a .411 batting average in 56 plate appearances. Turtle has hit five home runs and has 16 runs batted in the first 18 games this spring.

The rest of the K-State starting lineup includes Otto Kaifes and Mike Hamacher, who split time between duty at first base and designated hitter; second baseman Guy Greco; shortstop Pat Stivers; third baseman Jim Donohue; left fielder Kevin Ellis, who will start in place of the injured Scott Gilbert; center fielder Gary Pridey; and right fielder Mike Hinkle.

Kaifes is another key to the K-State attack. The junior is second to Turtle in homers and leads the team in walks with 17. Kaifes is also second on the team in game winning RBIs.

Tom Parsons leads a strong Wildcat bench. Parsons is hitting .500 in limited plate appearances and is 10-10 in stolen base attempts to lead the squad.

Leo Seiler, who has fielded flawlessly at second base, contributing 13 putouts and 13 assists.

Another key Wildcat reserve is

The Wildcats will be idle Saturday before resuming play Sunday against Creighton at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Myers Field. The single game is scheduled for nine innings. Creighton enters the contest with a record of 13-2 and is coached by Jim Hendry, who, like Vaught, is in his second year at the helm.

The Blue Jays recently completed a road swing through Florida that saw them hook up with such teams as the Miami Hurricanes, a perennial visitor to the College World Series at Omaha's Rosenblatt Stadium, the home park of the Blue Jays.

Following the weekend action, K-State will have but three games remaining prior to the start of the Big Eight Conference season March 29 in Lincoln, Neb., against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

'Improved' K-State may surprise fans

Frank Myers Field may have resembled swamp land earlier in the week, but it didn't Thursday afternoon as the K-State baseball team went through the paces of an afternoon workout in preparation for three weekend games.

Today, weather permitting, the Wildcats will resume their spring campaign with a doubleheader against Fort Hays State. The Wildcats will host Creighton Sunday in what should be the best home contest to date this spring.

So what's the big deal? Why should we care that the baseball team is playing this weekend? It's going to be boring anyway, right?

Coach Gary Vaught has assembled a team that appears to be much stronger than that of a year ago, when the Wildcats posted a record of 29-33 in Vaught's first year at the helm and made the Big Eight Conference Playoffs for only the third time ever

Why is this team stronger, and how could it get even stronger?

The team is stronger because of three things according to Vaught an increased number of skilled players on the squad, increased self confidence among the players themselves and team unity that can't easily be measured but often accounts for several victories a

"We've got a really strong sense of team unity here," Vaught said as he snuck a quick peek at one of his hitters in the batting cage during Thursday's workout. "They've nicknamed themselves 'the zombies' because to watch them go about their business you'd think they were dead.

"But they'll fool you. We've got a great deal of team speed and power. I believe in this team and the direction we're going in."

Why not believe in the Wildcats? Vaught has been a winner everywhere he's been. In fact, his first season at K-State was the only losing season he's ever been involved with as a player or coach. And, as anyone who has ever been involved with athletics will tell you, winning is definitely contageous.

But this team may never reach its full potential - and Vaught will be the first to tell you this - if fans don't support the team by attending the games at Frank Myers Field.

The promotions are lined up and ready to go. The Famous Chicken will make a visit to Manhattan, and the club will be hosting another $10,000 giveaway and a "mystery weekend" (in which the winner comes to the park with his suitcase packed and takes an all expenses paid trip to an unknown destina-

But it shouldn't take prodding on the part of the athletic department to put fans in the stands at Frank Myers. This team is good and the product will speak for itself. Those who get on the bandwagon now are going to be along for what should be a fun ride.

Not since Ted Power, now of the Cincinnati Reds, went to the mound in 1976 have the Wildcats truly boasted a club - or even an individual player, for that matter that was truly good enough for people to want to come out to see on a consistent basis. Those days are over. See you at the ballpark.

LSU earns berth in Southeast final

By The Associated Press

Georgia Tech, 70-64, Thursday night to set up an all-Southeastern Conference final in the Southeast Regional of the NCAA basketball tournament.

LSU earned a berth in Saturday's Southeast finals against Kentucky, which defeated SEC colleague Alabama, 68-63, in the opening semifinal game at The Omni in Atlanta.

Another SEC team joined the Final Eight field when Auburn upset No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas, 70-63, to move into the finals of the West Regional at Houston. The Tigers will play in the West finals against Louisville, which stopped North Carolina, 94-79.

Don Redden scored 27 points and Derrick Taylor added 23 in LSU's victory over Georgia Tech of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Tigers, getting clutch baskets throughout the second half from both Redden and Taylor, will tangle for the fourth time this season against Kentucky in the winals Saturday afternoon with the winner advancing to the Final Four in Dallas on from the East and and Midwest who haven't gotten an opportunity to compete outdoors yet. It's a great facility and a first-class competition.

While Miller said he expects the competition in this weekend's meet to be of high caliber, he said that the toughest challenges for the team, such as the Florida Relays, Kansas Relays, Drake Relays, Big Eight Conference Championships and NCAA Outdoor Championships, lie

Team scoring will not be kept in the Paper Tiger. Miller said he is trying to schedule meets without team scoring early in the season to avoid having to double- and triple-enter athletes in events to score team points.

All-American long jumper and triple jumper Kenny Harrison has been the top competitor for the men's team in meets so far this season. Harrison took first place in the long jump (26-9 3/4) and fifth in the triple jump (53-5 3/4) in the NCAA Indoor Championships at The Myriad in Oklahoma City.

The women's team placed second behind Nebraska at the Big Eight indoor meet at Lincoln, Neb. Four women's team members earned all-American honors in the indoor season including high jumper Rita Graves, sprinter Michelle Maxey and distance runners Jacque Struckhoff and Anne Stadler.

Graves finished second in the high jump at the NCAA and Maxey took third in the 500 meters.

Tennis teams set to return to court

The men's and women's tennis teams will hit the courts in the coming days to help them prepare for the upcoming Big Eight Conference season

The men's team plays today at 2 p.m. at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area tennis courts against Central State (Okla.). The men's team plays again Monday against Tulsa at 3 p.m. On Tuesday they host the KSU Invitational which brings Bethel, Kearney State (Neb.) and Fort Hays State to town. The quadrangular will begin at 9

The women's team does not play again until March 28, when they face their first league opponent, Missouri. The men also meet the Tigers on the 28th. The men's match scheduled for March 19 against Kearney State was postponed.

The women are scheduled to face cross-state rival Wichita State on March 29 at the L.P. Washburn courts. The women have not beaten the Shockers in tennis since the two schools began playing on the intercollegiate level. 'We have never beaten Wichita State," Coach Steve Bietau said. 'Last fall we lost by only a couple of matches. We have added three girls since then, so I feel we can definitely compete with them.'

The Wichita State match gets under way at 2 p.m. at the L.P.

WASHINGTON - Rep. Jim Slattery of Kansas wagered a home-grown commodity Thursday on the University of Kansas Jayhawks, predicting they will defeat Michigan State in the next round of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Congressmen bet on NCAA game

Slattery, a Topeka Democrat whose district includes KU, bet a 100-pound sack of flour on the Jayhawks in Friday's Midwest regional semifinal game in Kansas City, Mo. Rep. Bob Carr, a Michigan Democrat, matched the wager with a bushel of cherries. "I predict it will be Michigan State by five," Carr said at a news conference just outside the House chamber. He wore a green

Michigan State sweatshirt and was carrying a basketball. "I say Kansas by 10," declared Slattery, dressed in a dark business suit. "Sorry it's going to be a long game for you." The flour, according to Slattery, will be hard red winter wheat grown in Kansas and milled at a Cargill plant in Topeka. The governors of the two states, John Carlin of Kansas and James Blanchard of Michigan also made a bet on the game. If the Jayhawks come out on top, Blanchard owes Carlin a free weekend on Mackinac Island in Michigan. Should Michigan State win, Blanchard will spend an expense-paid weekend at the Holiday By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Some of the accusations President Reagan made against Nicaragua's leftist government, as he sought to win support for $100 million in aid for antigovernment Contra rebels, are unraveling.

The Brazilian government is seeking an explanation of what Reagan meant in his speech on Contra aid Sunday night when he listed Brazil among targets of Nicaragua's "outlaw regime." There is no insurgency there, the Brazilians say.

Reagan said "top Nicaraguan government officials are deeply involved in drug trafficking" but the Drug Enforcement Administration said afterward it knew of no evidence to support that charge.

Meanwhile, Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams acknowledged to Congress that one group of Contras - although not the main group - also is being investigated for drug smuggling activity. Reagan said past American efforts been rebuffed. The Nicaraguans, other Latin American countries, many American churches and a large number of members of Congress say the administration never negotiated seriously. Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., says the Reagan administration broke off the talks.

Reagan denounced the Sandinistas' treatment of the Catholic church in Nicaragua, but the organization representing all 300 American Catholic bishops wrote members of Congress the next day opposing aid to the Contras.

Reagan charged the Sandinistas had persecuted Nicaraguan Jews and desecrated a synagogue. But two American Jewish leaders say the synagogue is unused because most of the small number of Jews who were in Nicaragua before the 1979 Sandinista revolution have left.

Rabbi Balfour Brickner of the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue in New York, who went to Nicaragua on a fact-finding mission in 1984, said most of Nicaragua's handful of pre-to negotiate with the Sandinistas had revolution Jews had close ties to the dictator, Anastasio Somoza, and left of their own accord.

Brickner said Israel supplied Somoza with military hardware. "That meant the Jewish community felt pushed and pressured," he said. "They could not be against what the government of Israel was doing."

From a peak of about 150 Jewish families in Nicaragua before the revolution, most of them escapees from the Holocaust, there are now not more than five families, Brickner

But the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said in a statement Wednesday that the Sandinista government had harassed Nicaraguan Jews, which led to the flight of nearly all the Jews from the

It said there had been a firebombing of a synagogue in Managua, death threats against Jews, the burning of cars belonging to Jews and the confiscation of property owned by prominent Jews. In September 1983, the U.S. Embassy in Managua reported it had found "no verifiable ground" to accuse the Sandinista government of anti-Semitism.

In a confidential cable to Shultz, obtained by The Associated Press, Ambassador Anthony Quainton said, "The evidence fails to demonstrate that the Sandinista have followed a policy of anti-Semitism or have persecuted Jews solely because of their religion."

Hyman Bookbinder of the American Jewish Committee in Washington said he supports aid to the Contras — but not because Jews have been mistreated by the Sandinistas. "They (the Sandinistas) have not been any worse, or not been any better than the governments of the last 10 or 15 years," Bookbinder

A poll cited by Reagan's special envoy to Central America, Philip Habib, on Monday as evidence that Central Americans support the Contras turned out to have been conducted last year.

Area hydrogen levels too low for investors

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - An official of the Kansas Geological Survey on Thursday deflated high hopes lawmakers had of cashing in on a large hydrogen field near Junction City when he told a Senate committee there's not much of a chance of commercial develop-

Don Steeples, the survey's associate director for research, warned the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee the Legislature is acting prematurely by considering a bill that would impose the state's mineral severance tax on hydrogen produced after 1996.

'The likelihood of commercially profitable hydrogen production in Kansas is remote," Steeples said. "We are concerned about placing a severance tax on what may be a phantom resource.

Steeples said action by the state to impose the tax would be exploited by "snake oil salesmen" trying to fleece potential investors in the hydrogen field. He worried that con men would use the tax as proof the field is for real and many Kansans might lose money

"We're not optimistic this field has any economic potential possibly not ever and certainly not in the near future. The probability of success on this hydrogen field is really low and we're concerned about Kansas citizens putting money into a hydrogen project.

The testimony was sobering news for the committee, which has been told for months about the limitless potential presented by the hydrogen field, discovered three years ago by Donald Clark, a wildcatter.

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt and committee chairman, said he was surprised by Steeples remarks and said the panel would be very cautious in approaching the bill, which has already cleared the House. He said it's unlikely the bill will be endorsed.

"I don't have much impulse to move on that bill," Kerr said. "He touched a match to it, all right."

The bill would add hydrogen to the list of minerals subject to the 8 percent severance tax. The others are oil, natural gas, coal and salt.

The field is considered a geological novelty and is estimated to cover 300 square miles. It yields a gas mixture of 40 percent hydrogen and 60 percent nitrogen.

Hydrogen is the lightest known and most abundant element in nature. However, it rarely is found in natural formations. Instead it usually is found in combination with other elements, such as oxygen in water.

Economic statistics give faulty picture

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Many of the nation's economic statistics are presenting a very misleading picture of the economy they are supposed to measure, a congressional study stated this week.

The study, prepared for the Joint Economic Committee, found that government statistics-gathering operations had fallen victim to Reagan administration budget cuts and outdated practices. "Business leaders and government policy makers are operating in the protracted delays in updating dark because of the poor and declining quality of government information gathering," Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., said in releasing the study. "Many of our statistical programs are no longer adequate to keep pace with our rapidly changing economy.'

The study was prepared by Courtenay Slater, chief economist at the Commerce Department during the Carter administration.

"Increasingly, the usefulness of the data produced is impaired by statistical concepts to reflect the changing structure of the economy," she said. "As a result, information about new industries and rapidly growing economic sectors is often scanty and sometimes misleading."

The study found that the Standard Industrial Classification, which the Census Bureau uses to categorize companies, was last updated in 1972. A revision was nearly completed in 1981 but fell victim to budget cuts.

The outdated classification system means the fast-growing service sector of the economy is underrepresented with such major enterprises as computer software makers and retail computer stores not even having their own classification categories, the study said.

Another major problem, according to the study, was serious distortions in the monthly trade statistics that have resulted because an "archaic processing system" has been overwhelmed by a rising volume of import documents.

The processing delays have meant that any given month's import figures are made up of one-third or more of goods that entered the country in earlier months.

This discrepancy has played havoc not only with trade statistics but the gross national product, which rely on trade data.

In one particularly glaring example, the government first reported that the economy, as measured by the GNP, was growing at a robust 4.3 percent rate in the final three months of 1984. However, when soaring imports were properly counted almost a year later, this GNP growth was reduced to a rate of 0.6 percent, a near-recession.

The first partial introduction of a new computerized processing system to speed up the paperwork is still months away, the study said, guaranteeing that policy makers will be operating in the dark for some time to come.

The various problems were attributed in large part to administration budget cuts. The study said that spending at most of the government agencies that produce economic statistics for the 1987 fiscal year will be below the 1980 levels after adjusting for inflation, even though the statistical workload has grown substantially in this decade.

Robert Ortner, Slater's successor as chief Commerce Department economist, said he could not comment specifically on the allegations.

Film returns to upbeat tone; Woody Allen tradition back

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

There was a time after "Annie Hall" when Woody Allen's movies (principally "Stardust Memories" and "Interiors") were so caught up in describing a world full of angst and misery that they ceased being much fun. In his recent movies, most notably his newest film, "Hannah and Her Sisters," he sets up this same misery and anguish and then knocks it over, affirming life instead of telling us what a quagmire we live

Film Review

This doesn't mean his usual obsessions are gone. No, they're still there - fear of death, fear of love, fear that everything in life adds up to nothing in the long run. But overriding each fear is a new found belief that these fears simply get in the way of his enjoying life.

This helps make "Hannah and Her Sisters" into Allen's most mature work. It's defintely his best work of the '80s.

Allen's rele as actor is only a shtick to peform as a chronic hypochondriac, but the film really belongs to the title characters.

Hannah (Mia Farrow) is the only one of the three sisters to have married. She's been through a previous marriage (Allen plays her ex), and now she is settled down with a new husband, Elliot (Michael Caine). But is the marriage really secure? Elliot thinks he feels stiffled by the marriage. He's also in love with Hannah's sister, Lee (Barbara Hershey). But she is living with an artist (Max von Sydow) whose only contact with the outside world is through

The other sister, Holly (Dianne Weist), is a struggling actress who can't find the right man, or the right job. She tries running a catering business with her best friend (Carrie Fisher), but they meet a man (Sam Waterston) whom they both fall head over heels for, throwing the catering business into turmoil.

That's a lot of characters to keep straight, but Allen weaves their lives together so skillfully that they all come to life and remain distinct from one another character, Mickey, finds he might have a brain tumor. Mickey has been in the habit of running off to the doctor for every problem he imagined he had, but now the problem might be real. Allen doesn't let this become maudlin, though. Even when things look grim for Mickey, Allen keeps the laughs coming. There is one scene where Mickey must undergo a CAT scan, but remarkably Allen makes the CAT scan humorous.

Allen masterfully balances all of the bits and pieces of his characters' lives and makes an authentic and sincere film. Part of this is due to the fine ensemble of actors he has working for him. Barbara Hershey is particularly good as she balances her life between Caine and Sydow. She's never looked so good. Dianne Wiest's character is a bit of a kook, but Wiest handles the character so carefully that she always remains credible.

I'm a bit hesitant to claim that 'Hannah and Her Sisters' is the masterpiece that some critics claim (at times the movie jumps arbitrarily from scene to scene), but it is a fine, mature work that should take it's place alongside "Annie Hall" and "Manhattan" as one of Allen's finest

University joins education society for promotion in Kansas City area

By DAN ALLEN Collegian Staff

With more than 10,000 K-State graduates in the Kansas City metropolitan area, the University recently joined a professional organization that should help its public relations there.

The University became a member of the Kansas City Regional Council for Higher Education Jan. 23. The KCRCHE was founded in 1962 and serves campuses in the Kansas City

Its purpose is to promote cooperation between administrators and faculties of the 13 institutions involved.

Charles Hein, director of University relations, said approximately 9 percent of the student body is from the Kansas City area, and it's important to let people in the area know what is going on at the University. "It makes sense to join the KCRCHE because the University has an alumni office in Kansas City and the Division of Continuing Education offers courses there. The College of Architecture and Design is also developing a program there," Hein

In addition to providing information to the Kansas City market, KCRCHE member institutions work together to share resources, to develop enrollment, and to provide professional development opportunities, Hein said.

"The KCRCHE is a professional organization for professional educators. This organization will help people serve one another," Hein

Hein said it will be helpful for faculty members because they will be able to exchange ideas with others who are doing the same thing elsewhere.

"Many members of our faculty want to know what others are teaching and the content of what others are teaching," Hein said.

The KCRCHE Board of Directors consists of the chief executive officers of member institutions and University President Duane Acker became a member by virtue of the University's membership in

Although the KCRCHE has existed since 1962, Hein said he has an idea why the University was just invited to join.

"I think the members felt the awareness of need for communication with the Kansas City metropolitan market," he said.

Farm land rate of return climbing

By The Collegian Staff

The rate of return on farm land sales is increasing as land values are said. going down, said Dean Link, assistant vice president for appraisals at Farm Credit Services of Topeka.

'There has been an accelerated drop in land values," he said.

Link cited examples of farm land sales across Kansas. The price of one property dropped 51 percent in seven years, he said.

The rate of return on farm land sales is increasing at the same time the value or price of the land is dropping, he said. One sale he worked on recently showed a 5.8 percent overall

"We can't say that the land's not showing some kind of return," Link

Another trend was for landowners to switch to a crop-share situation or to lower the cash rent on land they don't farm themselves.

Link gave an example using his mother, who recently lowered the cash rent on her 80 acres to $30 per acre. The rent had been $35 per acre for the past four or five years. Link said he is encouraged by these trends.

"The investors are ringing the phones. Some of the land is starting Link has been asked if the sales have been under coercion and said he believes the market is made up of duress sales.

"The definition of market value really is textbook theory. The real world just isn't that way. All the sales are somewhat under duress,' he said.

"I almost want to say if we're going to place a doctorate in one place we ought to take one away from someplace else (because of limited resources). We're talking out of both sides of our mouths. We can't be all things to all people in all

Armstrong called the action to postpone the decision "a prudent decision" that would allow the regents to seek independent corroboration.

Acker said he was proud of the program because it "lets us show our pride in the work of our classified employees.'

Other employees receiving recognition were classified employee of the year finalists and semifinalists, plus 29 retirees and 189 employees with five, 15, 25 and 35 years of service.

This year's program began in October when Acker invited the faculty and staff to submit nominations of their choice for the honor. About 152 faculty and staff nominated 51 co-workers to be considered for the award. In December the 18 semifinalists were selected by the KSU Classified Affairs Committee, the coordinating group for the program. The list was narrowed to six finalists in January.

The selection process works through a series of interviews with the nominees' fellow employees.

The other five finalists were Kenneth Casey, laborer II for plant maintenance and utilities; George Kuhlman, custodial worker for facilities custodial services; Lloyd Manthe, animal caretaker II for animal sciences and industry; Phyllis Mentgen, account clerk III in the Controller's Office; and Tommy Slagle, agricultural technician in the Department of Horticulture.

At the end of the ceremony Darwin Liverance, director of personnel services and coordinator of the Employee Recognition Program, presented President Acker with a service pin as a farewell honor thanking him "for his efforts over the past nine years.

Regents select Wefald as president

Academics president's main goal

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

OVERLAND PARK - Jon Wefald, chancellor of a seven-school university system in Minnesota, was selected by the Kansas Board of Regents on Saturday from among three finalists to succeed Duane Acker as president of K-State.

Wefald, 48, who has been chancellor of the 51,000-student Minnesota system since 1982, will assume the presidency of the 123-year-old institution July 1.

"I'm delighted and honored to be chosen," he said at a news conference at the Doubletree Hotel in Overland Park following more than one hour of deliberations by the Regents and their unanimous decision to offer Wefald the job. "I am looking forward with great enthusiasm to working at Kansas State University.'

Wefald and two other finalists were interviewed Friday and Saturday by the nine-member Board of Regents, which governs K-State along with five other state univer sities and Kansas Technical Institute in Salina. The president, as chief executive officer of the university. reports directly to the Regents in a system of shared governance.

The interviews were the culmination of a six-month search process which drew nearly 150 nominations and applications.

Wefald said his primary objective will be to make K-State into one of the academic leaders in the Big Eight and to ensure the institution ranks among the top 15 land-grant schools in the nation.

"Kansas State is a first-rate institution and Ruthann (his wife) and I will work hard to make it better. I'm looking forward to the years ahead."

Emphasis will be placed on maintaining traditional agricultural, human ecology, engineering, architectural and veterinary programs, but he indicated intentions to broaden the academic scope of the University.

Wefald said he will encourage students, faculty, alumni, staff and administrators to unite behind a strategic plan to boost enrollment, strengthen links between the University and industry, build stronger athletic programs, improve efforts in the collection of federal and private reseach funds and articulate the school's message to its various constituencies.

"I am very, very confident that we will improve enrollment at Kansas State. Recruiting is a very important challenge," he said. "My job will be to get people to realize the excellence

Jon Wefald, K-State president-elect, speaks about his plans for the future of the University during a press conference Saturday in Overland Park in which he was named President Duane Acker's successor. Wefald, who has served since 1982 as chancellor of the State University System of Minnesota, will assume his new responsibilities July 1.

Members of the Kansas Board of Regents, Richard Reinhardt, Dr. Bill Roy, Dick Dodderidge, and Sandra McMullen crowd into a hotel room for the deciding vote. Reinhardt moved that Wefald be named next president.

Regents conclude presidential search

By JILL HUMMELS Staff Writer

OVERLAND PARK - The Kansas Board of Regents validated its choice of Jon Wefald as the logical successor of President Duane Acker by a voice vote with no dissension here Saturday. While there was little discussion after the formal motion was made by Regent Richard Reinhardt of Erie, the Regents offered plenty of comment following the passage of the motion.

Dr. William Roy, former U.S. Congressman and a member of the board since January 1985, said there are several reasons Wefald was the Regents' choice.

"First, he has a good track record as a president of Southwest State University and as chancellor of the state university system in Minnesota - and that is important.

"His background goes both ways He has a doctorate in history and broad experience in agriculture.

'Third, I believe Dr. Wefald will bring about enthusiasm and pride in Kansas State University. He is dynamic, has great enthusiasm and is very articulate."

"I would say that each of the individuals were well qualified," said Reinhardt of the three candidates the Regents interviewed, "and it boiled down to style and personality traits...There was no big controversy." He called Wefald, "very aggressive," and said, "he had experience and expertise in a broader arena than the other two candidates," alluding to Wefald's experience as state commissioner of agriculture in Minnesota and his academic background in history.

More news coverage may cause media to disregard local stories

By TOM SCHULTES Business/Government Editor

While network television may be broadening its coverage areas, that action may prompt local media to forget its own community, said Tom Brokaw, anchor of 'NBC Nightly News."

Brokaw, who has anchored the news program for about five years, met with local and regional media at the Holidome Sunday afternoon. Brokaw is in Manhattan to deliver the Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues at 9:30 this morning.

Brokaw said his lecture's topic will be "The Role of Television in Their Lives."

He said local media has a responsibility to its viewers, citing a recent election in Illinois where failure to educate voters has been seen as one cause for the election of Lyndon LaRouche supporters on the Democratic ticket.

Brokaw said the Illinois election may be a case of when "locals don't pay that much attention to local politics."

He said technology allowing a station to "pack up and go anywhere in the world at a moment's notice...may (cause the locals) to forget what's happening in their own backyard."

He said the press "needs to be very diligent ... and (using the IIinois example) needed to work harder to tell people what the candidates are all about."

"This is a very good example of how local politics is important in the everyday way of life," Brokaw

He said the role of journalism is to point out what is wrong in the world, which may be one reason the public views the media as being arrogant.

Using Nicaragua as an example, he said the public should know if there are American advisers in the country and if they are training Nicaraguan troops, but not if it

Lecture series sets precedent

By DAN ALLEN Collegian Reporter

Students at the University have had the opportunity to see such speakers as Richard Nixon, Ronald Reagan and Nelson A. Rockefeller since the Landon Lecture series began in 1966.

Tom Brokaw, "NBC Nightly News" anchor, will present the 71st Landon Lecture at 9:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium. David Epstein, University of Kansas student body president, said in the Feb. 13 edition of The University Daily Kansan that KU needs a lecture series on the same scale as the Landon Lecture series. "Every time they have a big speaker at K-State, everybody at KU packs up and goes over there. It kind of shows us up. There's no reason for KU to be behind K-State in this issue," Epstein said in the article. Epstein said last week that K-State has by far the premiere lecture series in the Midwest and K-State should be very appreciative of what

"What we (KU) are attempting to do is copy the Landon Lecture series. We are finding that it is not easy to do," Epstein said.

Max Milbourne, professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and assistant to former University president James McCain, said the idea for the series surfaced between two friends and there is no truth to the rumor KU was offered the lecture series first.

Milbourne said McCain and Alfred Landon, former governor of Kansas and 1936 Republican Party nominee for president, were having lunch one day when the subject of a lecture series was introduced.

Milbourne said both McCain and Landon believed they could attract people and support for a lecture series by using Landon's name.

Landon gave the first Landon Lecture on Dec. 13, 1966, in the Union ballroom. The subject was "New Challenges in International Rela-

"This thing has been successful from the beginning and it has continued to grow and become stronger throughout the years," Milbourne

Milbourne said the Landon Lecture series is the most outstanding series in the United States and every time a speaker comes, it sparks interest all over the nation.

He said although the lecture series still uses Landon's name and still has Landon's support, Landon doesn't

Videotape shows Sakharov healthy

HAMBURG, West Germany — The Bild newspaper said Sunday that Soviet sources have provided the daily with a 15-minute color film of an "obviously healthy" Andrei Sakharov.

It said the videotape, made by hidden cameras, shows the Soviet Union's most prominent dissident visiting a doctor's office and an auto mechanic's shop, discussing disarmament with a KGB agent, and talking by telephone with his wife, who is in America, Bild said.

The KGB secret service made the film between December and early February, Bild said. "Bild has the corresponding (soundtrack) cassette," the paper said, adding that it was obtained from "Moscow

Bild, a mass-circulation tabloid, has previously received numerous Soviet leaks regarding Sakharov, a physicist who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975 for his human rights activities.

Physicians mourn loss of peace

OVERLAND PARK - While the United States was conducting its first nuclear test of the year Saturday at an underground test site in Nevada, a group of physicians here held a moment of mourning for what they called their lost patient - peace.

"I share the sense that, in a way, the patient has died with that explosion," said Dr. John O. Pastore, as about 60 doctors, members of Physicians for Social Responsibility, interrupted a two-day seminar to observe a moment of silence, complete with an American flag flying at half-staff.

'But the physician does not quit because a patient dies," said Pastore, secretary of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War. "You mourn the loss, and then go on and see the next 10 patients.

Pastore was one of several speakers at the conference on U.S.-Soviet relations who blasted President Reagan's decision to pro-

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev called last August for a mutual moratorium on such tests and declared that the Soviet Union would suspend all tests for six months. He extended the unilateral ban until March 31, but this month announced it would continue indefinitely. until the next U.S. test.

President Reagan has said the tests are necessary to make sure the U.S. arsenal is up to date and rejected Gorbachev's proposals, saying they contained nothing new.

Dr. Dimitri Venedictov, director of the Health Information Institute in the Soviet Union and a member of the international doctors' group, told the conference delegates he was disturbed by Saturday's test.

"It will be a disruption to the process of seeking peace," Venedictov said. "I think there was a very large hope in my country that the United States would join in banning tests. I hope that reason will prevail."

Unlike the previous three years when the best movie winner was predictable, the race among the five nominees for best film achievement of 1985 has resulted in no strong favorite.

"Out of Africa," a romantic triangle set in the vivid landscape of colonial Africa, seems like a good middle-of-the-road choice.

But there also is strong support for "Prizzi's Honor," a comedydrama of duplicity in the Mafia underworld, and "Kiss of the Spider Woman," the prison-cell battle of wills between a fiery revolutionary and a movie-mad homosexual.

"The Color Purple," the drama of a black farm woman's lifelong struggle for self-worth, appeared to be out of the running when the film's 11 nominations did not include director Steven Spielberg, responsible for such box-office hits as "E.T." and "Indiana Jones." But the Directors Guild award to Spielberg on March 8 indicated that he does indeed have adherents in the film community. A split vote could result in a best-picture Oscar for "Witness," the

When David Byrne became dean of the College of Education two years ago, he said he had many goals to fulfill, one of which was to build a concept of professionalism for the College of Education. Now, he said he sees this as his first priority.

"I want the College of Education to think of itself as a professional school rather than as an extension of the College of Arts and Sciences," Byrne said.

"A College of Arts and Sciences has as its fundamental mission academic development, whereas professional schools have as their priority mission professional development," he Byrne, the former dean of the College of Education at New Mexico State University, Las Cruces, N.M., said in a professional school one acquires the habits and skills necessary to practice in his or her field.

Byrne said he thinks academic development is as important as professional development. He said one of his greatest accomplishments so far is beginning working relationships with other colleges on campus, especially the College of Arts and Sciences, to ensure the students a well-balanced educa-

This is vital, he said, because the College of Arts and Sciences is where most education majors take their general requirements.

The curriculum in the College of Education is also going through changes, he said.

"There's a large body of new literature and research, perhaps the best ever done in education, with regard to better understanding of what people do when they teach effectively," he said.

There is another concept called clinical teaching, which utilizes new techniques in everything from lesson plans to test formats. Byrne said the college is going to try more effectively to incorporate these materials in the undergraduate program.

"Clinical teaching is very popular in schools at this time, and recently graduated people will have to demonstrate knowledge of it," Byrne said.

Byrne also said he thinks it's important for the college to serve as an "intellectual and service resource for public schools," including collaboration with people who are in the profession.

Byrne said there were 50 superintendents from around the state on campus this fall talking about a school study council which would be managed by the college. He said working with them could benefit graduates and undergraduates.

Daredevils give student spot on team

By KIM KINSLOW Collegian Staff

The opportunity of a lifetime has just frontflipped and landed at Brandon Kisner's doorstep.

Kisner, a K-State yell leader and junior in business administration, was chosen March 17 to be one of the four Bud Light Daredevils.

As a daredevil, Kisner will have a chance to travel and perform in front of thousands of

"That is going to be so awesome," Kisner

Kisner made an oral agreement to become a daredevil starting in September.

"I was really surprised. It just blows me away just thinking about it," he said.

Becoming a daredevil will mean Kisner will have to leave school for a year, but Kisner said the opportunity he has for traveling will be a good learning experience for him. He also said his parents are "behind him 100 percent."

Kisner said the only thing his parents are worried about is the chance of injuries involved in doing the routines.

The daredevils were looking for people who can tumble well and have good body control in working with the mini-trampoline,

"(Ty Cobb, a daredevil) said he was really impressed with the way I flew over the pyramid," Kisner said.

Kisner said the daredevils first noticed him when they came to perform at one of the K-State basketball games.

When Kisner returns to the University to finish his degree requirements, he said he probably will not try out for cheerleading. He said going back to cheerleading would be hard to do after being a yell leader for two years, going to a national competition and being a daredevil.

Kisner said he is looking forward to performing in front of crowds.

Failure of bill could hinder U.S.D. 383

From Staff and Wire Reports

The recent preliminary defeat of a local option for school district funding - along with a veto threat from Gov. John Carlin - may have closed one avenue the superintendent of Unified School District 383 had considered for new revenues.

The House had rejected a measure to allow school districts to impose an income tax surcharge on individuals in an effort to decrease property taxes, a measure one lawmaker called a tax windfall for corporations.

The bill, which first failed on a 63-55 vote, would have allowed districts to impose a tax equal to 10 percent of the amount an individual pays in state income taxes, if voters in the district approved giving the district the power to impose the surcharge. The bill was revived about 24 hours later through voting tactics.

Unified School District 383 Superintendent Hal Rowe had cited the income tax option as a means of raising revenue lost by federal level reductions in school aid.

Rowe said, "My concern is the requirement of the district is going to be greater than the state aid," noting an anticipated increase in enrollment of about 200 students for the coming school year.

"The district is becoming more wealthy in proportion to other districts, but we are getting a lower percentage of total revenue of state aid," Rowe said. He said there were two bills pending which would limit budget increases for local districts to 2 percent or 4 percent.

Last week, the House tentatively passed a bill which forces the lowest budget increases on local districts in

According to a report in the Topeka Capital-Journal, schools which spend above the median amount per pupil will be restricted to budget increases of 2 percent. Schools spending below the median per pupil will be restricted to 4 percent increases. Current restrictions are 5 percent and 15 percent respectively.

The formula for state aid to local schools is based in part on local district wealth. The lower a district's land values, the lower its wealth, which allows for more state funding.

Lower land values in agricultural communities could provide rural districts with larger increases in state aid than urban areas with stable or rising land values. The earlier-approved Senate bill would have restricted budget increases to 1 percent and 3 percent.

Saturday, House Majority Leader Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said, "I can only guess" the final percentages would be 2 percent and 3 percent respectively, instead of the proposed House bill.

Rowe said in the Manhattan area, property is selling at a higher price than other rural areas. He said the difference between the market and assessed value of property is spreading, which keeps property taxes low and revenue for the district limited.

"I would never oppose the concept of a local option, but I would prefer state tax opposed to local taxation," Rowe said. He said the broader the tax base, the more options and the better off they would be.

Braden said the measure originally defeated was designed to give school districts more options in raising revenue. Braden was the bill's primary sponsor.

"The whole idea is to reduce the burden on property tax payers," Braden said. "That's the only reason for this bill."

But Rep. Jim Lowther, R-Emporia, called the bill "an escape valve" for districts, which can only use property taxes to raise The bill came under strong criticism from Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, because it would have applied to individuals and not corporations. Corporations would have their property taxes reduced by a district if such a surcharge were

During debate on the bill, Reardon accused Republican leaders of wanting to give corporations a property tax break.

"I think it's pretty clear where the priorities are," Reardon said.

In addition, Reardon said the Legislature would be "throwing tax credits at corporations indiscriminately" if it approved the

Wefald accepts post with opportunities

In October 1985, Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, compared the presidential search process to an Easter egg hunt in which "hundreds participate and thousands come to watch."

As we approach Easter it is appropriate to note that Koplik's assessment of the process was accurate. The search drew the attention of many Kansans concerned about K-State's future.

In a few months Jon Wefald, chancellor of a seven-university system in Minnesota, will replace Duane Acker as president.

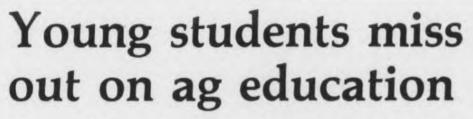

Wefald discussed some not-somodest goals during his presentation on Saturday. Making K-State one of the top three schools in the Big Eight and putting it in the company of great land-grant universities like Purdue University will not be easy.

In the way of such a development are some big obstacles: declining enrollment, intense competition between Regents universities for funds and programs, a poor rural economy, tight state education budgets, a disgruntled faculty - who receive salaries below what they deserve — a negative self-image and a struggling athletic department. In short, there is plenty of opportunity for success at K-State.

The solutions to these and other problems will not come easily.

Without a vision for the future Wefald will have a difficult time in Kansas. The task is known, but no president can succeed alone. A unified effort by students, faculty, employees and administrators is necessary.

Kansas children of today tomorrow's leaders of the state and the United States - know little about agriculture, according to a study sponsored by The Kansas Foundation For Ag In The Classroom.

Out of the 2,016 students who participated in the study, just one-third of the students knew that wheat is harvested in June and early July in Kansas. Only 3 percent of the students selected the correct answer to a question about the 3 percent of people still farming in the nation.

Agricultural production was not the only focus of the 45-question study, it also contained questions about how agriculture affects everyday life.

The study, submitted to elementary and secondary students in the state, was given to determine the agricultural knowledge of students. What sponsors of the study found was disappointing, to say the least.

Just one-half of the junior high students questioned knew the meaning of pasteurization, the method of destroying diseaseproducing bacteria in milk with heat.

It didn't matter if children were from rural or urban areas, there was virtually no difference in the answers. Half of the students in the 105 schools answered "I don't know" to guestions about agriculture.

In a state where agriculture is the No. 1 industry, it is a travesty that children, probably adults too, do not know more about the agri-business and the farmers' way of life.

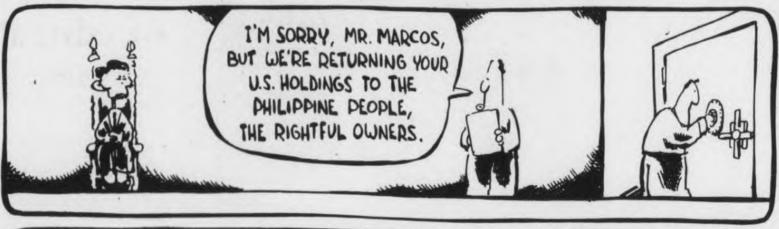

If people don't even know when wheat is planted, how can they comprehend that a great deal of America's farmers are facing bankruptcy and psychological hardships because depressed markets? If they can't understand this much, people can't understand that farmers lose money when buying a loaf of bread — they pay more for a loaf than they receive for the grain in the bread.

Today's children are taught and are influenced by their instructors. It's high time that instructors teach children about the value of farming and the problems of agriculture, the point the foundation is trying to make. Teaching children today about agriculture could save the industry tomorrow.

Reaction to meatout disconcerting

TOM

Business

Editor

SCHULTES

As most everybody knows, last Friday marked Agriculture Day across the nation. But it also marked "The Great American Meatout" - much to the consternation of farm groups and media seeking agriculture

Probably not too many Kansans would have heard about the meatout if it wouldn't have been for the reactionary-fringe of the

The goals of the meatout included educating persons on health factors regarding meat consumption and encouraging Americans to forgo meat products for a day.

The president of the Farm Animal Reform Movement, Alex Hershaft realizes his group cannot - nor intends to - turn everybody into vegetarians.

"It's to get people to stop and take a deep breath and consider the consequences of their diets." Hershaft said.

But that's not the message that at least two television stations - nor the Kansas Farm Bureau - want the American public to hear, which shouldn't be too surprising.

So what did those two stations do in reaction? They cancelled the showing of a game show Thursday morning. That's right, viewers of "The Price is Right" were denied the right to watch the program.

And why "The Price is Right"? Because the show's host, Bob Barker, served as meatout chairman.

Which may, or may not have been the reasoning behind Kansas Farm Bureau President Doyle Rahjes' contention that the meatout is being promoted by "lunaticfringe crusaders.

But the issue deals with more than the long-ensuing debate over red-meat diets, cancer and heart disease.

The issue in the media is this: Should a show be taken off the air because the management (or financial backers) of a station does not agree with off-the-air comments of a game show host?

It should be remembered that Friday's show, which was prerecorded, did not mention the organization or Barker's affiliation

True, a station does have the right to reject programming, but how far is it from censorship to deny a program air time because of the hosts extra-curricular activities.

A good many television "celebrities" have done a lot worse - received extra publicity for it - and not had their shows cancelled.

It seems incredible for a medium, supposedly so concerned with access to information, differing opinions and the freedoms of speech and assembly, to cancel a program for the reasons cited. George Logan, general manager of WIBW-

TV in Topeka, reportedly said his Topeka station "objected to Mr. Barker using his television popularity for a cause that promoted 'ridiculous' claims.

One would assume from Logan's statement that he has more knowledge of the subject than the American Heart Association and American Cancer Society. Both organizations recommend people eat lean meat (such as fish) and avoid fats.

One can only wonder if WIBW intends to discontinue running public service ads for such organizations.

And what if Logan doesn't like seat belts? Would he reject any programs with singer Barbara Mandrell in them?

And Rahjes' complaint about the organization's attempts to hurt an industry already in trouble doesn't wash.

There is no doubt the agricultural community is in trouble, but then agriculture is also the industry that provides non-red meat foods to the public. Soybeans aren't made on conveyor belts. It is doubtful the "lunaticfringe crusaders" are numerous enough to make the "ag crisis" much worse.

And it is hoped the "lunatic-fringe" doesn't include all vegetarians - Mr. Rogers, from "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood" and a confirmed vegetarian - just doesn't seem like that

Universities need to break barriers

Enthusiasm and idealism highlight Jon Wefald's aspirations for K-State.

Wefald, who will assume the K-State presidency July 1, has made one comment to the press that, if he doesn't retract, signifies he is ready and willing to "fight for K-State."

In the March 17 Collegian, Wefald said, "I would be genuinely honored and thrilled to be president of Kansas University...because it is a land-grant university with opportunities not only to serve students, but to serve the people of Kansas."

Wefald's last phrase more correctly should have been "to serve some of the people of Kansas.

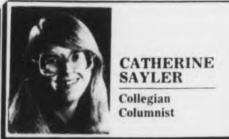

Since June 1980, K-State and other Board of Regents institutions have abided by the socalled "Geographic Jurisdiction Areas, Off Campus Coordination" policy of the regents.

The policy requires that each university offer off-campus courses and establish outreach centers only within certain boundaries in the state.

K-State and Fort Hays State University share most of western and northeastern Kansas. Emporia State University and The Wichita State University share the land between the two institutions and the University of Kansas and Pittsburgh State University share a portion of eastern Kansas, including

The Topeka area, Shawnee County, is open to all regents schools, but "courses offered by Shawnee County will be provided only by ESU, K-State and KU.

The policy allows one exception: "Programs unique to a specific Regents institution will be offered statewide as needed."

The geographic jurisdiction policy, commonly referred to as the regionalization policy, severely restricts several of K-State's colleges and has made expansion difficult. For example, according to John Brealzeale, vice president for academic affiars at WSU, a large portion of the industries in the state are located in Sedgwick County and the 12 surrounding counties. K-State's College of Engineering cannot access the Wichita area and thus, is cut out of the one city with a population most likely to attend off-campus

Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture, has also been frustrated by the policy. Kansas City, which best provides architecture students with a realistic urban experience, sits in KU's "territory" and is assumed to be off-limits to K-State. Lapping's solution to the problem is to locate all of K-State's outreach programs in Kansas City, Mo., since the regents' policy does not cover the state of Missouri.

Lapping and members of the architecture faculty established a University design center and a joint lecture program with the Nelson Art Gallery, all within the state of Missouri, last fall. Lapping hopes to more fully equip K-State's Missouri center in the near future. In defense of his actions, Lapping said,

"By the reciprocal agreement between the state of Kansas and Missouri, the Kansas State College of Architecture is also the state of Missouri's College of Architecture. Many of our students come from Missouri and many of the most compelling programs which we work on are Missouri-based.'

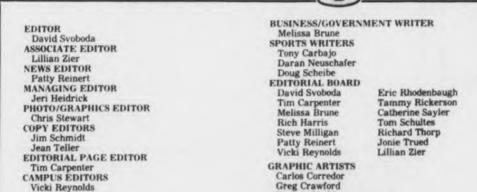

Like Wefald, Lapping noted that K-State's mission as a land-grant university gives it the specific responsibility for extension - for reaching all areas of Kansas.

"I think that the concept of regionalization is an inappropriate one for a comprehensive state university - for a land grant university. We ought to be everywhere and anywhere," Lapping said.

"My own sense is that the market will decide (which university succeeds in an area). (The market) is more appropriate than regionalization.'

The 6-year-old policy is a major threat to the future of K-State. Wefald's wish to "serve the people of Kansas" entails more than he may realize. It is up to Wefald to either convince the regents to void the policy or to develop ingenious ways to circumvent the policy.

As Lapping said, "Doing something along the lines of regionalization is a major task facing the new president."

Legislators say sales tax hike necessary

By TOM SCHULTES Business/Government Editor

If those attending Saturday morning's Eggs and Issues breakfast were legislators, Kansans would undoubtedly be facing sales tax in-

"It looks like a tax increase will be necessary," said Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, at the breakfast.

Knopp said current budget proposals will need to include methods to raise $30 million to $40 million in taxes or cut the state's budget by the same amounts.

He said the last option would be difficult because legislators are working off Gov. John Carlin's base

Carlin presented two budget plans early this year. The first plan, the base model, dealt with current tax rates and revenue-raising methods. The second proposal included approximately $190 million in new revenues from the governor's request for enactment of a 1-cent-perdollar increase in state sales tax

Knopp said the state is now facing no budget increases for fiscal year 1987, compared to the smallest increase in recent years of 5 percent. He said suggestions to abolish the state's severance tax, which may help the oil industry retain profit margins, should not be followed.

He said the rationale of doing away with a tax because it isn't currently as profitable as hoped could result, if followed through, in dropping corporate income tax and individual in-

Knopp predicted that when oil prices increase again, it would take 5 years to initiate a tax on oil, adding an industry taxed in other states shouldn't be exempt in Kansas.

He said the real problem isn't with the state's tax system for oil, but in $15 per barrel price reductions.

House Majority Leader Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said he never thought he would say it, but "Gee, I wish oil prices would go back

Braden said oil prices could go back up just as rapidly as their recent decreases.

He said some Kansas communities are feeling the effect by people losing their jobs. He said this, in turn, causes a loss of income tax to state coffers coupled with sales tax declines due to decreasing retail

But Braden said he doesn't think Kansas needs the full 1-cent sales tax

"One hundred and ninety million dollars is more than we need," he said. "There (could be) a great temptation to spend the (extra) money.

Braden said he favored either a plan for a one-half cent increase in July for one year, followed one year later by a 1-cent increase or delaying any increase until Jan. 1, 1987, when a full one-cent increase would go into

He said whatever method is chosen, it would have to be a bipartisan effort. "There's no way we'll have 63

Republicans vote for a tax increase," Braden said. He said through maneuvering, Democratic counterpart has been asked to find 25 party votes for a tax increase, which would be met with 38 votes from Republican legislators. Both numbers equal 50 percent of the respective party's House member-

Braden said he felt there was a "good bi-partisan vote in the Senate" for the issue.

Later, Braden said income forecasts for the state were reduced by more than $130 million last December, and a recent update further reduced estimates by about an additional $40 million. He said if projections are correct, Kansas could end up with a balance of $24 million at year's end, which would be a low carry-over.

Braden said he favored raising only what was necessary because it is very difficult to hold the line...everybody has their own pet projects" they don't want to cut spending on.

Rep. Ivan Sand, R-Riley, said although the state does need to find new revenues and encourage industry, he would not support repealing the severance tax.

He said decreasing oil prices are 'driving one of our biggest industries from the state." He ranked the oil industry second only to agriculture in terms of income and importance to Kansas.

Sand said the biggest problem is that in Saudi Arabia, oil flows readily from the ground, while it takes an investment of $18 per barrel in Kansas to get oil to the surface.

"How do you think we can compete with those greasy people over there?" Sand said.

After the discussion, a vote was taken by the audience, reflecting near-unanimous support for a tax in-

Braden then noted that if he asked the same question in Clay Center, the response would probably be reversed. He said he was scheduled to speak at a similar function there later in the morning.

He said while members of a University community could see the immediate impact of revenue losses, his Clay Center constituents would question tax increases in view of the farm economy. He said arguments against tax increases, such as welfare freeloaders and the need to cut state spending, were not as accurate as they may have been in the past.

"(The Legislature) has cut the budget a lot in the last few years...and most of the freeloaders (are) off the welfare rolls." The next scheduled Eggs and Issues breakfast is April 5. The series is sponsored by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce. Reservations are requested and can be made by calling the Chamber offices

Economic commission proposes legislation

By TOM SCHULTES Business/Government Editor

In an attempt to broaden the state's industrial - and economic base, the Kansas Economic Development Commission has issued 10 initiatives and nine pieces of proposed legislation.

Commission Chairman Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said the body is pursuing development of a statewide risk-capital system.

The House Majority Leader, speaking at Saturday's Eggs and Issues breakfast, said the system would involve investing $10 million in idle state funds, matched equally with federal funds. The total investment could create $65 million in venture capital.

Venture capital, also known as risk capital, is used primarily for start-up companies or those embarking on new ventures entailing some investment risk but offering the potential for above-average future profits, according to Money magazine's Complete Guide to Personal Finance and Investment Terms.

Among other incentive proposals for economic development from the commission are tax credits for investors in venture-capital companies and tax credits for corporation research and development expenses. Creditable amounts would only be for expenses over current funding levels for research and development, in line with the goal of promoting new development.

But, Braden noted, the current Kansas Constitution does not allow such a relationship between state and industry.

He said the constitutional prohibition against such activity would have to be repealed. Conversely, Braden said an amendment allowing governing bodies to provide tax abatements for more than ten years should be considered. He said the state is becoming strict on the issuance of industrial revenue bonds (also known as industrial development bonds)

Braden predicted, "IRBs may be extinct in a few years," which may reduce incentives to proposed industrys from governing en-

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said Kansas should be active in economic development, but warned "venture capital is risky business," just as its name im-

SPACE CENTER, Houston -Officials at the Johnson Space Center and at Rockwell International are making tentative plans to build a new space shuttle to replace the destroyed Challenger, and most believe it will be the safest, "cleanest" spacecraft

Congress has not approved the construction of a new orbiter, but experts have estimated the cost at about $2.8 billion and the time it would take to build at about three years. And they have suggested a name - Challenger II.

"That's the one I like," said Richard Colonna, manager of the space shuttle projects office at the Johnson Space Center.

Colonna said no firm plans have been made as yet.

Wefald to keep busy with several challenges as president

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

K-State is at a crossroads. When Duane Acker announced nearly one year ago that he would step down as president of K-State, many people saw it as an opportunity for a new president to tackle several difficult problems.

Jon Wefald, chancellor of the seven-school state university system in Minnesota, will become K-State's next president in a few months and will inherit problems associated with K-State's public image, student recruitment and retention, tight fiscal budgets and instability in the athletic department.

"There are plenty of problems and challenges facing the new president to keep him busy - capital improvements, enrollment, federal funding and tight budgets there are plenty of challenges," said President Duane Acker.

Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and Presidential Search Committee chairman, said everyone must "recognize that the future of the University depends" upon the ability of the next president to meet challenges head on.

K-State may be the "most well kept secret" in the Midwest, Frieman said several months ago, "but with this we have a severe image problem. With athletics, enrollment declining - and the coliseum thing has been badly handled."

The Fred Bramlage Coliseum has received new life: however, image problems and the potential for budget reductions remain.

Based in truth or not, there is a feeling among many Kansans that K-State is behind the University of Kansas in development.

"Yes, I've encountered this apprehension on the part of the people or the tendency by some to look over their shoulder at some other institution," Acker said. "But if anybody thinks of this institution as behind in terms of stature, they shouldn't be thinking of themselves as part of Kansas State."

Enrollment at K-State reached a peak in 1981 at 19,982. It has fallen to 18,185 during the current semester. Declining enrollments have forced K-State to reduce its total operating budget for the 1985-86 academic year by $1.4 million to $183.9 million, which $83.4 million is from state appropriations.

Reductions in state revenue projections could leave the University's 1,043 instructional faculty with only a modest 3 percent salary increase in fiscal year 1987, said Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents.

Faculty salaries have fallen far behind peer institutions during the past 10 years and the Kansas Legislature may be unwilling to boost salaries considering the depressed agriculture, aviation and oil industries, Koplik said.

Gilbert Johnson, a Colorado Springs businessman and member of the search committee, said the next president must "build on (K-State's) tradition and do a turn around" if the situation is to change in the coming decade.

According to Frieman, "There is tremendous potential (at K-State), but it needs to be guided and directed. The University is floundering, drifting, and we need direction.

Rep. Joe Knopp, whose district includes Manhattan and K-State, recently tried to sum up what the University needs in a new president: "What the University is looking for is someone who can walk on water, who can bring Nobel Prize winners and Heisman Trophy winners to campus and do it within two years."

Historic land-grant tradition remains, but times changing

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

During the past 123 years - a period in which the nation endured a grueling depression and witnessed the demise of millions of farm jobs the mission of K-State has revolved around agricultural teaching. research and public service.

The University's mission, as stipulated in the Morrill Act, under which land-grant colleges came into being, dictates that K-State lead the state in the development of agriculture and applicable technology.

The depressed agricultural economy, declines in enrollment, the departure of President Duane Acker and pressure from other institutions under the jurisdiction of the Kansas Board of Regents to secure funds and establish new programs have led some to suggest K-State review its mission

The Regents are planning to study the missions of Kansas Technical Institute and the six universities under its control later this year. Emphasis will be placed on developing new mission statements and a plan to reduce program duplication.

"Demand in agriculture is less in terms of students. The Regents and Dr. Wefald will work together to determine Kansas State's place among all of the universities," said former U.S. Congressman and Topeka Regent Dr. Bill Roy.

Roy said K-State's land-grant emphasis should be maintained, but competition for funds is increasing and each institution must be responsive to shifts in demand.

If agriculture enrollment continues to decline, perhaps engineering, business and liberal arts programs need to be emphasized more,

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, opposes attempts to curtail the land-grant mission of the

"Having strong programs in all colleges is important to the University's future," Woods said.

"As a land-grant University one of the critical missions of the school is agriculture teaching, research and extension...it is critical for Kansas State and for the state of Kansas that agriculture remain strong."

Acker analyzes decade of evolution at K-State

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

President Duane Acker will bring his 11-year term at the helm of K-State to an end in June when he departs for a job as director of food and agriculture programs with the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Acker informed the Board of Regents in June 1985 of his intention to leave K-State at the end of the fiscal year.

Acker said the most rewarding aspects of his presidency include:

Academic strengthening of the University - going from nine national merit semifinalists in 1977 to 47

Increasing legislative support for K-State - $7.5 million in program improvement funds built into the base budget and $42.9 million for construction.

Capturing private gifts - increase from $10.6 million in 1975 to $44.5 million in 1985.

Recruiting quality faculty and administrators.

Increasing the percentage of Kansas high school graduates entering K-State from 8.3 percent in 1980 to 10.1 percent in 1984.

Awarding more scholarship money - $293,000 in scholarships were awarded in 1975, but $1.4 million this year.

Developing a greater international focus with programs in the Philippines, Nigeria and Botswana.

Acker said his greatest frustration has been an inability to concentrate investments in the highest priority and highest quality programs within each regents institution.

There are several goals Acker said he was not able to achieve during his

- Development of academic advising programs for each college. Construction of an art center and parking garage. Development of a powerful, financially secure, athletic depart-

- Clarification of the University's identity in terms of K-State's land-

Changing faces of University

Leaders take K-State onward

By JILL HUMMELS Staff Writer

During the span of the last 123 years, the form of K-State has constantly grown and progressed sometimes quickly, sometimes not but always with some sort of leader-

The Rev. Joseph Denison became K-State's first president in 1863. By no means an outside candidate for the job, Denison was one of the original promoters of Bluemont College and would serve as president for 10 years. In 1864, the Legislature gave Denison a restricted budget of $2,285 for salaries, insurance and lightning rods. During his tenure, education would focus on classical instruction instead of industrial education as the land-grant mission dictated. In 1873 the Kansas Board of Regents demanded the resignations of all faculty members. All but Denison were rehired.

From 1873 to 1879, John Anderson occupied the president's office. His first year the Regents resolved K-State's mission should be directed more toward agriculture, mechanical trades and industrial arts. The barn was remodeled to become Industrial Hall, the chemistry building was erected and the school's paper, the Industrialist, began publication.

In 1879, three months after Anderson's term ended, George T. Fair-171/2 year term would usher in graduate study, a three-fold increase in enrollment, campus telephone installment, Agriculture Experiment Station, Fairchild and Kedzie Halls, and several other buildings.

When the populists came to power in 1897, Thomas E. Will assumed the presidency. When the populists fell from power so did Will, thereby creating the shortest presidency (2 years) in K-State's history. Will brought in instructors with doctorates and founded the school bookstore.

In July 1899, Ernest R. Nichols moved up from his teaching duties in physics and electrical engineering. Nichols' administration is best noted for its capital improvements. During his term, Calvin Hall, Dickens Hall, the first Denison Hall, the auditorium, the Veterinary Hall (Leasure), and the Chemical Engineering Hall were erected.

When Henry Jackson Waters took the helm in July 1909, the focus on change was within K-State. Admissions standards were stiffened, divisions were created within K-State, the grading system was changed to more accurately reflect excellence and honorary societies appeared on campus within his 81/2 years as leader. The emphasis of college education was directed toward agriculture - Waters' discipline.

The seven-year term of William child was appointed to the post. His Jardine, 1918 to 1925, brought about an increase in the amount of land controlled by the college, the number of buildings on campus - Thompson Hall, Veterinary Clinics Building, and the President's Residence - and the level of salaries for faculty.

Leading K-State through the depression and part of World War II was Francis D. Farrell. Fundraising was undertaken to construct a memorial stadium and graduate study was formalized during his more than 18-year stay. K-State was authorized by the Regents to offer doctoral degrees in the departments of chemistry, milling industry, bacteriology, and entomology - the first such advanced degrees at

In September of 1943, Milton S. Eisenhower, brother of Dwight D. Eisenhower, came to lead the college. The only alumnus of K-State to become president, Eisenhower established the Endowment Association. The Collegian began daily, instead of semiweekly, publication. Moving away from former-President Anderson's idea of education, Eisenhower directed education toward liberal arts instruction during his seven year term.

James A. McCain took up presidential duties on July 1, 1950. His term would be the longest of any president - 25 years. His term was marked by growth, and he built an empire to work with it.

University supportive of Wefald

By JILL HUMMELS Staff Writer

The eagerness and enthusiasm of the K-State community appeared high Sunday as faculty, students, staff and alumni reacted to the naming of Jon Wefald as the 12th president of K-State.

Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, said Wefald's study of history and political science combined with his agriculture background would be a "good blend" for understanding K-State's purpose.

Steve Johnson, student body president, was enthusiastic about Wefald's selection. "I'm sure that he will work out very well...I'm looking forward to meeting him and working William L. Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said he "was impressed by...(the Wefalds') outgoing friendliness. Wefald has excellent experience...and has excellent academic qualifications. I'm very pleased ... '

Joe Knopp, state representative from Manhattan and former student body president, said, "I'm very positive and excited about his being here and his credentials. I'm positive...excited...and ready to go to work.'

Karen Henderson, head secretary for the Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Social Work, said the Kansas Board of Regents selection "was an excellent choice. His background was more than just agriculture...it will help everybody. I'm looking forward to working...under him," she said. "I think he'll build morale and build enrollment."

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said, "We all look forward to working with him...to meet the needs of the state of Kansas."

Virgil Wiebe, Rhodes scholar and senior in political science, geography and pre-law, said, "It sounds like he has very strong credentials...it pleases me that he is an academician too. He said that he supported (athletics) but that athletes should be students first," and that is good. Of the three finalists Wefald was his top choice, he said. When John Slaughter, chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park, was still in the running he was Wiebe's top choice. After Slaughter dropped from the race Wiebe's top pick became Wefald, he said.

William Fateley, professor of chemistry, said, "I'm delighted. He has excellent credentials and he seems to cut across many disciplines." Fateley said that juggling all of the schools in the stateuniversity system of Minnesota was good training ground for this presidency.

Arthur Loub, executive vice president of the KSU Foundation, said, "From all I've heard and read he is an ideal choice for Kansas State... Academically, he is extremely well qualified. He has been a professor, college president, chancellor of a seven-school system and commissioner of agriculture. His knowledge of agri-business...is very important."

Helen McIntosh, account clerk for the Dean of Education, said, "He sounded like someone who would be good for the job."

Jan Ray, Manhattan businesswoman and alumni member of the Presidential Search Committee, said the choice of Wefald was "an exciting selection for Kansas State University. I am looking forward to his term as president."

James McCain, who was K-State's president from 1950 to 1975, in a prepared statement from his home in Topeka, said, "Dr. Wefald will find it both challenging and rewarding to be associated with such a distinguished institution as Kansas State University with its first-rate faculty, quality students and loval enthusiastic alumni and friends.'

New year for Iranians begins in spring season

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

(Editor's note: The last names, classifications and majors for the sources used in this story have been withheld upon request.)

The first day of spring in the Midwest means it is time for the trees and grass to turn green. But for Iranian people, it means celebrating the new year with family and friends.

"Our new year is right at the beginning of spring, which means everything is being recycled, so humans should also recycle the old year with the new year, and start everything new," Ali said.

There are many traditions involved for this holiday, which was celebrated in Manhattan Thursday, the Iranian students said.

"Everyone (in the family) wears new clothes to gather around a 'halfseen' or a table that has seven dishes of things that all begin with the letter 's' in the Persian language," Behrooz said. "During the old days, these indicated a good harvest." "Right before the old year changes to the new, we have a custom that all of the family sits together so that they can push back the old and bring in the new all together," Ali said.

The seven dishes or objects on the "halfseen" each have a symbolic meaning, and different families may add to that their own things to symbolize wealth and happiness, Ali

This holiday is not a religious holiday, Behrooz said. The traditions started 2,000 to 3,000 years ago with the Zoroastrianism religion of the old

Persian empire before Islam came to Iran. Other customs include visits with each person's relatives starting with the eldest and continuing in order of age, Behrooz said. Usually the older person gives the younger ones brand new bills or coins when they visit, Korosh said.

The entire New Year lasts 13 days, Ali said. "We say that 13 is bad too, (as Americans think it is unlucky) so on the 13th day, the bad day of the year, we take everything outside the home and go out to the countryside. We take the pot of wheat growing (one of the objects placed on the 'halfseen') and drop it into a stream, which means it takes all of our disaster and takes it out to sea," Ali said.

'We are away from home, but I think almost all Iranians in this town still try to have a 'halfseen' or go to be with friends or family that have one to celebrate," Behrooz said.

"On the 13th day, sometimes people go out to Tuttle (Creek Reservoir) and have a barbecue with friends," Ali said.

Spring Intersession

May 19-June 6, 1986

INTERSESSION AT KSU-Spring

The three weeks between spring semester and summer school are a special time at KSU-the weather is great, parking is easy, the frenzy of graduation is over, and life on campus is extremely pleasant. The spaciousness of the campus is a perfect setting for highly concentrated classes.

Intersession classes usually meet for three hours a day, providing time to focus on a subject in depth. In a survey of Winter Intersession students, 75 percent felt that the most attractive features of Intersession were the chance to concentrate on one course at a time and the opportunity to earn extra credits to accelerate their programs. Both students and faculty have found Intersession to be a rewarding experience.

Spring '86 Intersession offers 40 credit courses-of 1, 2, or 3 credits each-from a wide variety of departments and colleges at KSU. Tuition and registration are explained below. Questions about specific course content or requirements should be addressed directly to instructors. If this publication doesn't answer all your other questions about Intersession, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566 (or 1-800-432-8222, toll-free in

See you in class!

REGISTRATION

Intersession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Intersession registration will take place in the BASEMENT OF FARRELL LIBRARY: registration dates are April 28-30 and the registration staff will be available from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. those three days. Additional registrations will be accepted from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday at 317 Umberger Hall from May I through the first day of class. Tuition is due at the time of enrollment. (Some lab and materials fees are also due at this time. See schedule.) The decision as to which courses will "go" will be based on the number of registrations recorded by 4:00 p.m. on April 30. The go/drop list will be posted near the Information Desk in the K-State Union on Monday, May 5; go/drop information will also be available from the Continuing Education Registration office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students unable to enroll in person April 28-30 may phone or mail in their registration. These registrations will be processed (in the order in which they were received) ONLY if spaces remain in the class as of 4:00 p.m. on April 28. Students may request a friend to enroll for them to maximize their chances of getting into their first-choice class.

Students are asked to check with their advisers to ensure that the Intersession class will meet degree requirements.

BE PROMPT!!

Although registrations in most "go" classes will be accepted until the first day of Intersession. students are encouraged to register during the April 28-30 registration period at Farrell Library. The go/drop decision is based on enrollments collected during that period. Delays in student registration will result in courses being cancelled; students interested in Intersession classes should register April 28-30 to be sure their preferred classes have a good chance of going as scheduled.

LATE ENROLLMENTS

A $10 late fee will be charged for enrollments after the second class meeting ends, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. A late fee of $25 will be charged for late enrollments after one-third of the class meetings have elapsed but before two-thirds of the class meetings have elapsed. NO ENROLLMENTS WILL BE ACCEPTED AFTER TWO-THIRDS

OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED.

COSTS

Tuition is $40 per undergraduate (UG) credit hour and $58 per graduate (G) credit hour and is due at the time of enrollment; tuition is the same for Kansas residents and for non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected at registration or by the instructor at the first class meeting. Lab and materials fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been posted (May 5), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT

The maximum credit allowed is four (4) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than four credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS WISHING TO SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON AN A-PASS-FAIL BASIS MUST DO SO AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION, OR BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED.

GRADES

Intersession grades will be averaged into the student's KSU G.P.A. Grades will be mailed to students beginning June 23, 1986.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. The go/drop notice will be posted in the K-State Union near the Information Desk on May 5. Students may also phone 532-5566 after that date to inquire. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. Students must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or

REFUNDS

All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Division Registrar, 317 Umberger Hall. A 100% refund will be issued if the request is received before the second class begins, or if the class is cancelled. A 50% refund will be issued if received after the second class begins, but before one-third of the classes have ended. NO refunds will be issued after one-third of the class meetings have ended. There are no refunds for an audited class after the class begins. Lab or materials fees collected at registration are non-refundable except those for cancelled classes.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's Bookstore at the start of Intersession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

HOUSING

Overnight housing on campus is available to Intersession students at a very reasonable rate. Rooms in a K-State residence hall are available at $10 nightly for single rooms, and $9 for doubles. Intersession students interested in arranging to stay in the residence hall should contact Robert Felde, KSU Housing Office, Pittman Building, 913-532-6453, to request room reservation forms. Advance reservation is recommended.

New year for Iranians begins in spring season

"Our new year is right at the beginning of spring, which means everything is being recycled, so humans should also recycle the old year with the new year, and start everything new," Ali said.

There are many traditions involved for this holiday, which was celebrated in Manhattan Thursday, the Iranian students said. "Everyone (in the family) wears

new clothes to gather around a 'halfseen' or a table that has seven dishes of things that all begin with the letter 's' in the Persian language," Behrooz said. "During the old days, these indicated a good harvest." "Right before the old year changes to the new, we have a custom that all of the family sits together so that they can push back the old and bring in the new all together," Ali said.

The seven dishes or objects on the "halfseen" each have a symbolic meaning, and different families may add to that their own things to symbolize wealth and happiness, Ali

This holiday is not a religious holiday, Behrooz said. The traditions started 2,000 to 3,000 years ago with the Zoroastrianism religion of the old Persian empire before Islam came to Iran.

Other customs include visits with each person's relatives starting with the eldest and continuing in order of age, Behrooz said.

Usually the older person gives the younger ones brand new bills or coins when they visit, Korosh said. The entire New Year lasts 13 days, Ali said.

"We say that 13 is bad too, (as Americans think it is unlucky) so on the 13th day, the bad day of the year, we take everything outside the home and go out to the countryside. We take the pot of wheat growing (one of the objects placed on the 'halfseen') and drop it into a stream, which means it takes all of our disaster and takes it out to sea," Ali said.

'We are away from home, but I think almost all Iranians in this town still try to have a 'halfseen' or go to be with friends or family that have one to celebrate," Behrooz said.

"On the 13th day, sometimes people go out to Tuttle (Creek Reservoir) and have a barbecue with friends," Ali said.

New year for Iranians begins in spring season

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

(Editor's note: The last names, classifications and majors for the sources used in this story have been withheld upon request.)

The first day of spring in the Midwest means it is time for the trees and grass to turn green. But for Iranian people, it means celebrating the new year with family and friends.

"Our new year is right at the beginning of spring, which means everything is being recycled, so humans should also recycle the old year with the new year, and start everything new," Ali said.

There are many traditions involved for this holiday, which was celebrated in Manhattan Thursday, the Iranian students said.

"Everyone (in the family) wears new clothes to gather around a 'halfseen' or a table that has seven dishes of things that all begin with the letter 's' in the Persian language," Behrooz said. "During the old days, these indicated a good harvest."

"Right before the old year changes to the new, we have a custom that all of the family sits together so that they can push back the old and bring in the new all together," Ali said.

The seven dishes or objects on the "halfseen" each have a symbolic meaning, and different families may add to that their own things to symbolize wealth and happiness, Ali

This holiday is not a religious holiday, Behrooz said. The traditions started 2,000 to 3,000 years ago with the Zoroastrianism religion of the old

Persian empire before Islam came to Iran. Other customs include visits with each person's relatives starting with the eldest and continuing in order of age, Behrooz said. Usually the older person gives the younger ones brand new bills or coins when they visit, Korosh said. The entire New Year lasts 13 days, Ali said.

"We say that 13 is bad too, (as Americans think it is unlucky) so on the 13th day, the bad day of the year, we take everything outside the home and go out to the countryside. We take the pot of wheat growing (one of the objects placed on the 'halfseen') and drop it into a stream, which means it takes all of our disaster and takes it out to sea," Ali said.

"We are away from home, but I think almost all Iranians in this town still try to have a 'halfseen' or go to be with friends or family that have one to celebrate," Behrooz said.

"On the 13th day, sometimes people go out to Tuttle (Creek Reservoir) and have a barbecue with friends," Ali said.

Observer discovers mysterious capsule

By PENNIE BRENEMAN Collegian Reporter

Recapturing the lost 1910 commemorative cornerstone of the old Nichols Gymnasium brought to light a mysterious time capsule which was opened March 12.

The lead tube, about two inches in diameter and seven inches long, was discovered in the cornerstone and opened at the request of President Duane Acker.

The tube (time capsule) was discovered by Terry Bokelman, observer for the Division of Architectural Services in Topeka, cemented into the commemorative cornerstone of Nichols Hall which was donated to the University by the class of 1910.

"The capsule was scheduled to be opened by President Acker at the presidents club meeting last Saturday. Acker decided that he wanted to know if what was in the capsule would be appropriate to show and and the stone has been shuffled issued that the capsule be opened around for nearly 17 years with its beforehand," said Tim Lindemuth, news editor for University Relations.

"The capsule was opened only to find a tightly rolled envelope and a 1910 penny located under the capsule," Lindemuth said.

The envelope was opened by Owen Koeppe, University provost, Lindemuth said. The contents were two typewritten sheets of paper listing members of the Class of 1910, and three business cards, perhaps those of the class officers, he said.

"We were kind of disappointed. We were expecting to find a lot more than two typewritten papers," Lindemuth said.

"Bokelman first noticed traces of the time capsule while the stone was on display Nov. 16, at the Nichols Hall Renewal Celebration," Lindemuth said.

Finding the time capsule in the stone was such a mystery because there is no record of the time capsule whereabouts forgotten.

"There are records of other time capsules on campus. There is no record of this time capsule," Lindemuth said.

When Nichols Hall was gutted by fire on Dec. 13, 1968, the 1910 class president took the stone thinking the building would be demolished, he said.

When construction began to restore Nichols Hall in 1983, officials were stumped about what to do with the large hole in the east wall where the stone had been.

It was decided to recapture the stone and put it in the east wall. But the stone could not be found.

A nine-month search for the 19-inch high, 30-inch long and eightinch thick stone took place and ended on the top floor of Farrell Library.

The stone was found locked in a storage area, wrapped and concealed by other archival items, Lindemuth said.

During the Nichols Hall rededication in November, the stone was displayed at the ceremony and University Archivist Tony Crawford exhibited pictures showing the history of the stone and the building.

"It was at this time that Bokelman noticed mortar on top of the stone and wondered what it was,' Lindemuth said.

Upon later investigation of the stone, a lead tube was discovered cemented into the stone, he said.

A new time capsule is being assembled to place behind the stone when it is remounted in the exterior northeast wall of Nichols Hall, Lindemuth said.

It has been suggested the class roster and penny be deposited in the new time capsule which was assembled by the Departments of Speech and Computer Science.

Tri-Delts record album, gain national recognition

By JUDY GOLDBERG Collegian Reporter

It might not be as popular as Prince's new album, but it will make K-State's chapter of Delta Delta Delta sorority nationally

The Tri-Delts cut an album Saturday afternoon at All-Faiths Chapel. It was made for all Tri-Delt chapters and contains 36 Tri-Delt songs. The songs include those sung at ceremonies as well as songs which were sung by Tri-Delts in the 1930s, said Lura Jo Atherly, freshman in journalism and mass communications, and one of about 25 Tri-Delts who recorderd the album. The chapter was asked to send in a sample tape to the National Tri-Delt music director in Arlington, Va., and was chosen in November to record the album. Atherly said.

The choir had been practicing the songs since the beginning of the semester, she said.

Atherly said she was not sure why the K-State chapter was asked to send in a demonstration tape, but they are known for their singing.

"We've always done really well in rush with songs and it's always been a major part of our house," she said.

The chapter did not expect to be picked, Atherly said.

"There are hundreds of chapters across the nation so we were really excited and surprised," she said.

Poll shows sexual bias still exists

By TERESA TEMME

Collegian Reporter Most women who work are aware it takes them longer and they must work harder than men to reach the same academic and administrative level, said Evelyn Hausmann, associate professor of adult and occupational education, during the Friday Focus on Women.

The topic of Friday Focus was "The Changing Attitudes of Women Toward the Workplace." In the lecture. Hausmann described a study her class, "Women, Education and Work," completed.

Hausman said the study attempted to answer several questions dealing with women in the workplace.

The primary emphasis of the project was to determine if women perceive a change in the workplace or work environment in the last decade on fairness, equal opportunity, non-bias employment practices, promotions, pay equity and general attitude about competence of women

The questions dealt with the following topics: marital and primary breadwinner status, amount and type of education, stereotyping, sex bias and harassment, promotions and salaries, starting new careers, reasons for lack of success, and satisfaction with work. Over a period of two years, each class was asked to participate and each member was asked to interview one woman in an administrative position and one woman in a non-administrative position. The women interviewed were supposed to have worked over a period of 10 years. Preferred categories of employment were education, health and business. A total of 173 interviews were used in the study, she Hausmann said 97 percent of the women interviewed indicated that even if they had enough money to stop working, they would still continue to work.

Fifty-seven percent of the women interviewed said the major reason for any lack of success in their jobs was because of their obligations to their family and children.

Sixty-eight percent of the women responded they had experienced some type of stereotyping, 55 percent experienced sex bias, and 23 percent experienced harassment at some time, according to the study.

The study also showed 46 percent of the women had been passed over at some time for a promotion, and 87 percent of the women were paid less for the same work done by men.

"The problems that women encounter in the workplace arise from three basic causes," Hausmann said. Prejudice which everyone acknowledges but continues to practice is the first cause. "Prejudice is practiced by women as much as men," Hausmann said.

The second cause is women's unfamiliarity with how business works at higher levels. The last cause is our cultural and social conditioning and upbringing, Hausmann said. "We believe in fair play. If you are good and honest you will be rewarded. If you work very hard and please

LET'S DO HOPE FOR REAL BIBLICAL GOVERNMENT

An open letter to the people of KSU

I am sure that virtually the entire campus community (and even the town community) is very excited that we now have an organization whose purpose it is to enable "Biblical Government." I know I am very excited about the possibilities, and I would think even the atheists, agnostics, and even the "godless" communists would also be very excited.

Why should such folks be excited?-because the predominant concepts of government in the Bible are justice, righteousness, mercy, forgiveness, grace, and love. The Old Testament demonstrates again and again that God forgives Israel and the Israelites for their transgressions and even when they are thoroughly defeated and dispersed God cares, supports, forgives, and loves them, and helps restore them to prominance-though always that they may demonstrate God's ways of justice, mercy, and righteousness, and not so they may do violence to their enemies. Indeed, one of the great stories of Passover Seder speaks of God's grieving for the Egyptians for they are also God's children. And the New Testament goes even farther in its concern for justice, mercy, forgiveness, grace, and love. We are told to love our enemies; to forgive seventy times seven; to pray for those who despise us; to clothe the naked; to visit the sick and inprisoned; feed the hungry; take in the stranger; free the captives; proclaim the year of jubilation (the once every 50 years event when all debts are forgiven and wealth redistributed to the poor and homeless); that if we live by the sword we will die by the sword; that we are to be the Good Samaritan (those told to be such in the New Testament despised Samaritans but realized that he really had been the real neighbor in the story); that we are to be the willing servant of all; that the weightier matters of the Law are justice, mercy, and good faith; that we are to show mercy; that we are to hunger and thirst for doing what is right; that we are to be peacemeakers (not peacekeepers); that we are to forgive as we have been forgiven by God; that there must be no limit to our goodness; that we are to turn the other cheek, give shirt and coat, and voluntarily go the second mile after being forced to go the first; etc., etc., etc.! Nowhere are we told to support a government that supports killing and destruction in order to establish justice and mercy. Nowhere are we told to support a government that spends billions on bombs and missiles and billions less on the hungry, the poor and the homeless.

So, yes, indeed we should all be very excited that we now have folks dedicated to establishing just such biblical government--for justice, mercy, righteousness, forgiveness, grace, and love is absolutely what we all need in our government, especially in regards to Central America. Now, if the folks here can only convince their beloved leader to be so biblically inclined we can all rest much easier and not worry about death and destruction of our brothers and sisters in Central America, who are also children of God.

Love, hope, and peace,

Rod Saunders

Using Nicaragua as an example, he said the public should know if there are American advisers in the country and if they are training Nicaraguan troops, but not if it would endanger troops' lives.

Brokaw said although the president "worked very hard" on aid to Contras, an excess of rhetoric from the White House and withholding of information may have hurt the president's goals.

He said the fact Sandinistas have been in power for about six years, and memories of Vietnam may have also hurt Reagan's chances in secur-

Brokaw said one aspect of his position concerns discussing his personal opinions on issues in public. "I ought not to let my views get between the audience and what I do on a nightly basis," he said. "They begin to look at what we are reporting and think to themselves, 'well, I know how he feels about that, or didn't he say that this is wrong."" Brokaw said then the viewer might suspect "everything that we do has a kind of a Brokaw stigma to it, which I think is wrong...and unfair to the au-

"I think there's a danger in personality journalism overtaking journalism," Brokaw said. "Because we appear with the news we report, we become in many ways as well known as those events. And the temptation is to think that you're as important as those events - and that is a temptation that must be resisted."

He said many changes in his role from the early '60s in Omaha to today are the result of the public's higher consciousness level with more people watching today - and paying more attention to it.

"What has happened in the meantime is that generations of Americans have grown up who are used to the idea of getting their news from television," Brokaw said.

"People are now accustomed to television news playing a very big part in their lives," he said, adding he would like to see expanded time

Group selects band director for post

By JAY KNORR Collegian Reporter

Stan Finck, K-State director of bands, has been selected chairman of the collegiate division for the 1986 Kansas Bandmasters Association convention in July

Finck, who is in his third year at K-State, came here from the University of Wisconsin at Whitewater where he taught for five years.

Finck said he is happy that he got the chance to be chairman of the collegiate division.

"I think it is important for us, as far as public relations and recruitment goes, to be involved with both of the organizations in the state. There is a music educators association, KMEA, as well as the Kansas Bandmasters Association. The bandmasters is just restricted to people teaching band throughout the state," Finck said.

The four-day KBA convention, scheduled for July 16 through 19, will be held in Wichita instead of Hutchinson as it has been in the past.

as chairman who will take over after the 1986 convention.

Flyers were sent to colleges and universities throughout Kansas announcing taped auditions for the intercollegiate band.

From approximately 200 applicants, 65 to 70 members will be chosen to perform during the last day of the KBA convention.

The board which selected Finck as the collegiate division chairman is composed of 10 to 12 members. There is always one college representative on the board.

The chairman position is usually The Kansas Intercollegiate Band is rotated each year from a big school selected by Finck and his successor such as K-State, the University of Kansas or The Wichita State University, to a smaller college. This keeps the input from small schools and larger schools about the same.

The current board will meet four times before the convention. The first meeting was held in October followed by one in December and another in January. The final meeting will be in May.

Scheduling the events of the convention are the main concern of the board. Checking the budget and keeping in contact with the clinicians such as James Croft who will be conducting the intercollegiate band are of the utmost importance.

Involvement by U.S. in Central America upsets Kansans

By SARAH KESSINGER Staff Writer

Testimony about the current Central American social and political situation heard Friday from Kansans who had visited the region was both "distressing and disturbing," said panelist Pat Lehman, Machinist Union activist and former Kansas Democratic Party chairman.

Lehman sat on a blue ribbon panel with four other Kansans for the Kansas Citizens' Hearing on Central America at the Third District Court in Topeka

"It appears to me today that our country is intent on not just maneuvers (in Central America), but on being actively involved in military engagement," Lehman

"There must be other ways we can work with them so that my children don't become the cannon firers." The public hearing, moderated by Jan Flora, associate professor of sociology, consisted of oral testimony about the current situations in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala. Written testimony from others who had visited Central America was also provided.

Robert Hinshaw, executive director of the Associated Colleges of Central Kansas, told about his studies in Guatemala and the effects of U.S intervention in the country.

"If the violence doesn't substantially diminish over the next year and if heavy U.S. aid isn't forthcoming as a consequence of (the civilian president's) recent election, then the consensus of my contacts among both the rural poor and middle class is that the civil war will be unleashed again," Hinshaw said.

"It is commonly conceded by my civilian president is a gesture calculated to increase the flow of U.S. aid," he said.

Charles Stansifer, director of the Latin American Studies Program at the University of Kansas, gave testimony about the 1984 Nicaraguan elections and public opinion about the Sandinista government in

All political parties had access to the media and the positions of the opposition parties were set out before the people, he said.

The election was "western-style" with registration, open campaigns and 90 percent voting, which is the highest number of people voting in a Latin American country in recent years. The Sandinistas received 67 percent of the vote, Stansifer said.

By keeping up on the situation in Nicaragua, keeping an open mind, friends (in Guatemala) that the reading press accounts and maintaining contacts, Stansifer said it is not difficult to say "the Sandinista government enjoys the support of the majority of the people in Nicaragua."

David Drake, a fellow at the Karl Menninger School of Psychiatry in Topeka, toured Nicaragua and visited the ministry of health, a military hospital north of Managua and a children's hospital in Managua.

"There was a room full of American equipment at the children's hospital that was useless because they had no spare parts for it. Two kids die each day because of the effects of the American embargo on that hospital," Drake said.

There is a sense of transformation now in Managua, he said. Since the 1979 overthrow of former dictator Anastasio Samoza, the people are turning the luxury and ruins into things which could be useful to the people.

Richard Williams, head of an export management company which works in Latin American companies, read testimony from one of three victims with whom he had talked after the bombing of civilians in Guazapa, El Salvador, by the country's military.

The victim was a woman from the countryside who said the government did not want poor people to work the land, so they were bombed or brutally murdered by the military to clear them in large quantities, Williams said.

Sister Marie de Paul Combo, English teacher at Donnelly College in Kansas City, Kan., said she had talked with families who had members taken or killed by the Contras and noted there is no comparison in the kind of abuses of the Contras and the Sandinistas because of the large number of Contra abuses

"When the Sandinistas committed abuses they were punished," de Paul Combo said. "The U.S. government has not once condemned the abuses of the Contras. 'Everyone we met said 'you are the only one who can help us. Go home and stop the war," she said. Following the hearing, panelist Ivan Wyatt, Kansas Farmers Union president, said it's often too easy to take what is heard from the official reports on Central America and 'react in a knee-jerk way to the rhetoric."

"This way we can know what is happening...before we run too far into the swamps of ignorance," Wyatt

Cultural awareness to highlight week

International Week begins today and is sponsored by International Coordinating Council, an umbrella

'The whole idea behind International Week is to make a line of communication between international students, American students and the people of Manhattan," said Ali Nikaeen, graduate student in civil

"In order to make a line of communication, cultural awareness is a very good bridge. If you can cross that, you can get communication going, and if you can get communication going, then you can get awareness in many areas - for example, in education, politics and

Campus tour guides handle many duties

How big are classes? Will I like living in the dorms? What is there to do on campus? Questions like these are familiar to campus tour guides

Campus guides are available for personal or group tours in the Office of Admissions in Anderson Hall, said Frances Clemons, tour coordinator and senior in psychology

The walking tours, guided by students, are available on request during the fall and spring semesters and during summer school from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, Clemons said.

The tours originate at Anderson Hall and follow a central basic route around the main campus, she said. The tours will differentiate for the different kinds of majors or interests people might have.

All tour groups are diverse and guides are taught to go with things they feel the person or group is interested in.

"I share different experiences about my involvements on campus with different groups," Clemons said. "I discuss activities that the University offers that would complement their own interest."

"You really need to know how to work with people and understand the different ones that you are touring," said Denise Shannon, senior in marketing. "Students touring the campus base a lot of their opinion on the tour guides.

People feel more at ease with student guides and will ask them more questions than they would ask admission counselors, Clemons said.

'Parents accompanying high school seniors are sometimes concerned with such things as drugs, alcohol and even sex," she said. 'They seem to feel they can get the answers from actual students.'

Along with the walking tours of campus, the admisssions office also conducts special tours, Clemons said. They can assist in planning visits to such places as the football stadium, the laser lab, the biology department and many other attractions on cam-

The special tours are very popular with grade school classes, senior citizens and 4-H clubs, Clemons said.

"The campus tours are very helpful and handy," said Tybel Miller, coordinator of the Be Busy After School program. "They handle all of the tours for the children and decide what would be an appropriate interest for them.

The tour guides consist of ten students and one student coordinator, Clemons said. Each student works an average of four hours a week and then conducts the special tours on a voluntary basis

April and May are the busiest times for spring tours, and finals week is always a popular time, she said.

"It's a given that we do have a strong tradition in land-grant mission...we're not about to compromise that or give any of that up. I do feel there will be additional emphasis given to other disciplines," said Reinhardt, a 1955 alumnus of K-State.

Regent Chairwoman Sandra McMullen of Hutchinson, a sevenyear veteran and senior member of the board, echoed Reinhardt's sentiment.

"We're very happy. We had a good search. We had good candidates and we're very pleased," McMullen said. Wefald articulates the land-grant mission well and has held leadership positions which made him an attractive choice, she said.

"They were all good candidates," said Regent Patricia Caruthers of Kansas City, Kan., who would not comment further on the Regents' choice graduate appointed to the board in January, said, "We worked very hard at it. It was not easy to decide who should be the next president. I think we had three good candidates."

A past leader of the University also had comments to offer the winning candidate on his upcoming job.

In a prepared statement from his home in Topeka, former K-State President James McCain said, "Dr. Wefald will find it both challenging and rewarding to be associated with such a distinguished institution as Kansas State University with its first-rate faculty, quality students and loyal enthusiastic alumni and friends." McCain, who held the presidency longer than any other person, also offered Wefald his heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a successful term in the president's office.

McCain, K-State's 10th chief executive officer, served as president of the 123-year-old institution from 1950 until his retirement in 1975. Acker succeeded McCain in July of

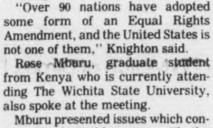

In an interview held before the naming of the president, Gene Budig, chancellor of the University of Kansas, said the next president's task would be arduous.

"The president has statewide responsibilities. It is especially important because of the state of agriculture today. People will look to him for guidance," Budig said. It was nearly five years ago to the day of Wefald's selection that the Regents chose Budig to head K-State's sister institution.

The next president would find the public, the Legislature and the Regents receptive and anxious to learn of his vision and imagery for K-State, he said.

"The new president of Kansas State University should take time to introduce himself to the people of the state. It is important for him to talk to people about the importance of K-State and its importance to the state," he said.

"We at the University of Kansas will work hard with the Regents' choice. It is a critical position. We are anxious to continue the cooperative work environment. It is an exciting position, one with great opportunities," Budig said.

Wildcats win in extra-inning battle

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

Someone forgot to tell Jim Donohue the Creighton Blue Jays are one of the best college baseball teams in the Midwest.

Donohue led the K-State baseball team to a 6-5 victory over Creighton in a 15-inning slugfest Sunday afternoon at Frank Myers Field. The sophomore third baseman collected five hits on seven tries, including the game-winning single with one out in the bottom of the 15th inning.

Creighton brought a 12-3 record to Manhattan, including a victory over nationally ranked Maine and a 2-1 ninth-inning loss to defending national champion Miami (Fla.).

Things didn't start out very well for the 'Cats Sunday. Starting K-State pitcher Rocky Ferguson walked the leadoff hitter, second baseman Chris Gadsen. The walk to Gadsen would later come back to haunt Ferguson as first baseman Eddie Ortega doubled to score Gadsen.

Before Ferguson and the Wildcats realized it, they were faced with a 3-0 deficit going into the fourth inning.

The fifth inning showed the first signs of life for the Wildcats. Shortstop Guy Greco walked, was sacrificed to second by right fielder Mike Hinkle, and moved to third on a ground ball by center fielder Gary Pridey.

Then, with two outs, first baseman Otto Kaifes came through with a single off of Blue Jay starter Brad Kucera, to put the 'Cats on the scoreboard, but trailing 3-1.

K-State added another run in the sixth when left fielder Scott Gilbert walked, stole second, moved to third on a passed ball and scored on a single by Donohue.

The game stayed at 3-2 until the ninth inning when the Blue Jays

'Cats' split draws ire of Vaught

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

To decribe K-State Coach Gary Vaught as an unhappy man following the Wildcat baseball team's split of Friday's double-header with Fort Hays State might not be doing justice to the situation.

After a 8-0 loss in the first game, K-State salvaged the split, 7-6, on a towering two-run home run by catcher Jeff Turtle.

Still. Vaught was hopping mad about his team's performance against the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics Tigers and made it clear he wasn't going to stand for it, scheduling a post-game practice under the lights at Frank Myers Field.

"I don't care who hit the home run, we're going to practice and we might be out here until midnight, so if the people want to watch people take ground balls, we're going to be out here," Vaught said. "That's the worst exhibition of baseball I've ever been around in my life.'

Vaught went into specifics on the aspects of the Wildcats' play that disappointed him.

"We did not cover the double play ball. We could not make a routine play. We've had no communication. We're letting people run on us. We've had no aggressiveness at the plate," Vaught also took the opportunity to outline the Wildcats' weekend practice schedule in preparation for Sunday afternoon's home game with Creighton.

"I tell you what fellas, we're going to work tonight (Friday) until I get tired and I don't think I'm going to get tired," Vaught said. "Then we're going to practice in the morning about 10 o'clock and we're going to come back in the afternoon around 2 and if I want to turn the lights on tomorrow (Saturday) night, we'll turn on the lights. We might burn the lights out before Sunday."

Vaught said he thought his team might have underestimated Fort Hays State.

"Our kids don't realize that on any given day, somebody can beat you, he said. "They had no fire in their eyes and I am very disappointed in they way they played.

"They sit around thinking that they're K-State and they're finally starting to get some recognition from the media and other teams and they're going to play like whatever they did in past years. I'm not going to put up with it."

match. On Sunday, just one day after the team's "embarrassing" loss at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area tennis courts, Coach Steve Bietau announced seniors Kris James and Scott Chandler had been dismissed from the team for "disciplinary reasons.

"We have had some internal problems on the team," Bietau said. "They (James and Chandler) are no longer with the team because of disciplinary reasons - we'll just leave it at that."

Posting victories for the Wildcats were Scot Sandlin at the No. 3 singles spot and Shawn Walburn at the No. 4 position. But, other than those brief flashes, there was nothing in the afternoon's play that pleased Bietau.

"No," Bietau answered when asked if there were any bright spots for his team on the afternoon. "The match was just that (embarrassing).

"We beat them 5-4 last year with less talent than we had on the courts Saturday. It was just an embarrassing match."

The Wildcats ace, sophomore Deon Botha, has also come upon hard times recently. The team's No. 1 performer has dropped five of seven matches this spring and has yet to find the winning niche he enjoyed

WSU names Fogler coach

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Eddie Fogler, an assistant coach at North Carolina for 13 seasons under Dean Smith, was named head coach at Wichita State Saturday. Fogler succeeds Gene Smithson, who was fired March 5. Fogler was introduced at a news conference by Athletic Director Lew Perkins, who said he had fired Smithson because of declining attendance, community apathy toward the basketball program and a poor academic record by players in the program. Fogler was a guard on Tar Heel teams that won Atlantic Coast Conference championships in 1968 and Fogler graduated from North Carolina in 1970 with a bachelor's degree in mathematics. He was a graduate assistant under Smith in 1971 and became a full-time assistant in 1973.

The Tar Heels, who were eliminated from the NCAA tournament Thursday night, have reached the Final Four three times and won the national championship in 1982 since Fogler has been an assistant.

How many?

K-State Rugby Club member Gregg Barnes makes sure teammate Bill Knopick is all right after he was momentarily knocked out during Saturday's game against the Jefferson City Rugby Club at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area intramural fields. Knopick came to and helped K-State win, 13-9.

Miller calls meet best opener ever

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

Coach Steve Miller couldn't have been much happier about his K-State track teams' performances in weekend action at the Paper Tiger Invitational in Baton Rouge, La.

The women's team collected two first place finishes, one second place and three thirds, while the men finished second in three events and third in another. "Without any qualification, this is the best opening meet we've had since I've been at K-State truly a spectacular two days for our track program," Miller said. "(This was) really a great, great meet for Kansas State. I was really very happy with the kids, everyone performed so well." In women's competition, K-State's Chris Vanatta and Jacque Struckhoff finished one and two in the 5,000 meters. Vanatta shattered school and meet records with her winning time of 15 minutes, 55.3 seconds. Vanatta's time also qualified her for the National Collegiate Athletics Association Outdoor Championships.

Miller called Vanatta's performance "the highlight of the meet.'

Struckhoff's second place time of 16:00.40 was also good enough to qualify for the NCAA meet. Anne Stadler set another meet record for K-State, winning the

1,500 meters with a time of

Felicia Carpenter's third-place leap of 39-10 broke her own school record in the triple jump by 91/2.

Also placing third for the Wildcat women were Rita Graves in the high jump (5-10 3/4) and Kelly Abernathy in the discus

Roxie McKee placed sixth in the javelin with a throw of 151-1.

The K-State women's fourby-100, four-by-200 and fourby-400 relay teams all qualified for the finals, but were forced to withdraw because of a leg injury to Karen Brown. Other members of the teams were Anita Isom, Michelle Maxey and Kim Kilpatrick.

In the top performance for the men, Mike Rogers took second in the 3,000 meter steeplechase in a national qualifying time of Brad Speer jumped his best height ever as a collegian (7-21/4) to take second in the high jump.

"We're really excited about Brad's performance," Miller "He appears to have broken out of his yearlong slump and looks ready to perform at the very high level we all know he is capable of," Miller said.

Competing for the first time in two years due to a knee injury, Gary Arpin took second in the javelin (225-10). Doug Brown finished fourth in the javelin at Freshman Dan O'Mara threw a lifetime best in the discus (172-7) to take third place.

"Dan was spectacular. To see a freshman come out against this very high level of competition and throw his lifetime best really lets you know what kind of competitor he's going to be," Miller said.

is already there (at K-State)." Enrollment at K-State has dropped by about 10 percent since 1980; from 19,547 students in 1980 to 18,185 in 1985. A large portion of that decline has been in the College of Agriculture, which has experienced a 27 percent decline in enrollment during the past 10 years.

Wefald said he plans to visit Kansas high schools — both urban and rural — and talk with people in cities throughout Kansas to make sure all Kansans realize K-State offers quality programs at a reasonable cost.

He said he is committed to promoting stability in K-State's athletic department and that studentathletes and coaches should "strive for the best.'

"I will emphasize fund raising at K-State, and emphasis will be placed on raising funds for academic scholarships for the best students in Kansas," Wefald said. "I will also see if we can't raise money for endowed chairs. The potential is there in all of the colleges."

Wefald, who was president of Campbell, dean of the College of Southwest State University, Marshall, Minn., from 1977 to 1982, and commissioner of agriculture for the state of Minnesota from 1971 to 1977, said his experience in agriculture, liberal arts and public administration will be important assets during his presidency.

"I feel I know how to work well with people and know how to unify people in colleges and departments to rally behind Kansas State. I know how to delegate authority and know it takes a team effort to reach goals," he said. Wefald, who has 15 years of administrative and management experience, said developing a united vision for the future will be essential to the success of the University in the next decade, but any decision to alter program emphasis would be made based on the premise that K-State has achieved academic excellence in many fields.

When Wefald assumes the presidency, as K-State's 12th president, he will start at a salary of $92,000 per year, the same salary Acker recieves now. The chancellorship of the Minnesota system currently pays $75,000 annually.

The two other finalists were John

Agriculture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and Charles Sidman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and chairman of the 15-member Presidential Search Committee, said his committee and the Regents sought an individual with a "proven record of setting goals and getting things done in the areas of fund raising, motivating and recruitment."

The University is in need of a "spark," he said.

Faculty Senate President Charles Reagan, who introduced Wefald at the news conference, said there is "no doubt where you belong - you belong with us."

Wefald said the interview process, and particularly the long wait for a final decision, was "unnerving and disconcerting."

Wefald has a bachelor's degree in history and political science from Pacific Lutheran University, Tacoma, Wash., a master's degree in history and political science from Washington State University in Pullman and a doctorate in history from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

name the speakers anymore.

The lecture series is supported by funds supplied by about 500 Landon patrons. A Landon patron donates $100 annually. This donation entitles the patron to a ticket in a reserved section for the lecture, a ticket to a luncheon with the lecturer and a printed copy of each lecture.

Julie Widman, secretary to the president and assistant to Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy and chairman of the Landon Lecture series, said helping organize speakers is one of the most gratifying things she does.

Widman said most Landon lecturers come out of the goodness of their hearts, although the speakers may ask to have their expenses covered.

Milbourne said all of the lectures were originally in the Union ballroom, but they soon became too popular and were moved to Ahearn Field House.

Although there are other lecture series at the University, the Landon Lecture series is the best known.

Eugene Kramer, professor in the Department of Architecture and chairman of the University Convocations Committee, said committee members work together and try to coordinate scheduling of speakers

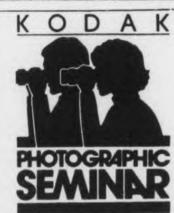

"I think we have a good, cooperative, non-competitive relationship and both of us (Landon Lecture and the University Convocations committees) recognize they play an important role," Kramer said.

Milbourne said K-State has something unique and something of which to be proud in the Landon Lecture series.

"I think over the years it's been well-balanced. We have had women, minorities, Republicans, Democrats and business people," Milbourne

Secretary of State George Schultz has announced that he will be coming to the University on April 14 to deliver the 72nd Landon Lecture.

Graves to lead tough track team

By DARIN RUSSELL Collegian Reporter

The K-State women's track team enters the 1986 outdoor track season after having four athletes finish the indoor season with all-American honors at the National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships in Oklahoma City.

Rita Graves, who placed second in the high jump, will continue to be the backbone of the Wildcat high jumpers.

"Rita (Graves) is one of our most consistent athletes," Head Coach Steve Miller said. "She continues to do well meet after meet. She has had some tough luck at the NCAA meets as she has been beaten three out of four times on the last jump.'

Michelle Maxey, Jacque Struckhoff and Anne Stadler were the other three women to earn all-American honors.

Miller said some of the team members will be changing the events they participated in during the indoor season.

Maxey, who broke a NCAA record in the 500 meters, will run the 400 and 200 meters during the outdoor season. Jacque Struckhoff and Chris Vanatta, who both ran the 3,000 meters during the indoor season, will concentrate on the 5,000 and 10,000 meters but will run the 3,000 meters from time to time, Miller said.

"Anne Stadler will also move up from the 1,000 meters to the 1,500 and or the 3,000 meters," Miller said. Miller thinks his team's main competition will come from the same team which

Rita Graves is expected to lead the Wildcat high jumpers through the the outdoor season. Graves finished the indoor season with all-tested K-State for the indoor title - the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

American honors and a second-place finish at the indoor National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships.

"Nebraska will be the team to beat again," Miller said.

Miller said the team's nucleus of Graves,

Maxey, Struckhoff, Stadler and Vanatta will have a fine suporting cast to help them chase the Big Eight title.

Those Miller highlighted on the Wildcat team are: Anita Isom and Karen Brown, 100 and 200 meters; Felicia Carpenter, long jump, triple jump and intermediate hurdles; Angie Barry, 800 and 1,500 meters; Nancy Hoffman and Lisa Wakem, 10,000 meters; Kim Kilpatrick, 100 and 400 meter hurdles; Kelly Abernathy, discus and shot put; and Roxie McKee and Wendy Adkins, javelin.

Things seem to be coming together for the K-State men's track and field team just in time.

After the completion of an indoor season which saw the Wildcat men finish sixth in the Big Eight Conference meet at Lincoln, Neb., a number of athletes turned in what Coach Steve Miller called "breakthrough" performances at the Paper Tiger Invitational outdoor meet at Baton Rouge, La.

What Miller says these "breakthrough" performances could translate into is a "top two or three finish" at the Big Eight Conference outdoor meet scheduled for May 16-17 at Boulder, Colo.

Following the performance at Baton Rouge, Miller said he was "really excited about the outdoor season."

Some of the performances Miller was talking about were Gary Arpin and Doug Brown taking second (225-10) and fourth (220-2) in the javelin and Brad Speer leaping a personal collegiate best in the high jump (7-2 1/4).

Especially encouraging for Miller is that Arpin, a senior, was able to throw the distance he did after a two-year layoff due to a knee injury. Brown is just a sophomore. The throws by Arpin and Brown were the top two throws by collegiate athletes at the Paper Tiger.

Miller said Speer had the type of jump
Miller thought Speer was capable of coming out of high school two years ago as an All-American.

"It's not a surprise because it's not quite as well as he's (Speer) jumped in the past," Miller said. "Brad is a competitor who really needs a big breakthrough jump. I think he's ready to jump 7-4 or 7-5 which would put him at the top of the Big Eight."

With the emergence of Arpin, Brown and Speer, the field events — a question mark heading into the season — are shaping into a possible area of strength for the team.

Long jumper and triple jumper Kenny

Harrison will be counted upon for a major contribution. Harrison is the NCAA indoor champion in the long jump (26-9 3/4) and took fifth in the triple jump.

Miller said a less strenuous training program for Harrison with more sprint work has helped the star jumper eliminate the injuries which plagued him earlier in his career.

"I think a big part in (Harrison's injury

"I think a big part in (Harrison's injury problems) is that his heart is bigger than his body. He has trained too hard in the past," Miller said. "I think there's definitely a correlation between speed and length of jump. Carl Lewis (1984 Olympic 100-meter, 200-meter and long jump champion) is evidence of that."

Miller predicts similar success for Harrison, only a sophomore due to injury redshirting.

"I think it's safe to say he'll be an Olympian," Miller said of Harrison. "He's still just a sophomore, a kid, an untapped resource."

Harrison did not compete in the long jump or triple jump in the Paper Tiger so he could rest for upcoming meets.

"He's (Harrison) like a bar of soap," Miller said. "If you use it too much, there's nothing left."

Heading the list of distance runners for K-State is Mike Rogers, the defending Big Eight champion in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. Rogers, also a cross country standout, ran a national qualifying time at the Paper Tiger.

"Mike already ran an 8:42.2 at Baton Rouge. He's a month or six weeks ahead of what he was last year," Miller said. "I look for Mike to break the school record, win the Big Eight and be a factor in the NCAA."

Another top distance runner is Bryan Carroll, who competes in the 5,000 meters. "We want him (Carroll) to get into the

"We want him (Carroll) to get into the national meet — and he's capable of this — and have him break the school record in the 5,000," Miller said.

An area of concern for Miller is the sprints, which have not been a strong area for the team in recent years.

Miller is counting on Melran Leach, a freshman sprinter from Cleveland, to bolster that area. Leach was injured late in the indoor season, but is expected to return to action in next weekend's Florida Relays.

"Since we don't have a lot of depth in that area, he's a pivitol sprinter," Miller said. "He'll open in Florida in the 100 and 200."

In the middle distances, Miller has been encouraged by the performance of Winfield freshman Pat Hessini. Hessini ran a lifetime best time of 3:54.57 in the 1,500 at the Paper Tiger.

Miller has put together a demanding schedule for the team which will see the Wildcats compete in such prestigious meets as the Florida Relays this weekend, the Kansas Relays on April 18 and 19 and the Drake Relays, April 25 and 26.

But in spite of all his athletic success, he said he felt like he was missing out on some other aspects of life.

"You do get lonely sometimes. There is no social life. If you're serious about it, there is no possible way there could be a social life," he said. "If somebody is having a social life during the outdoor season, then something is not getting done. It sounds bad. I think it is bad, but that's college sports. There's nothing you can say about Harrison said his performance at the NCAA track meet couldn't have come at a better time.

"It was the best thing of my life. It was time for the second season to start and the nationals put out their rankings for the outdoor season. It came at the perfect time." Although heel injuries had kept him from practicing for the triple jump as much as he wanted, Harrison still placed fifth in the event at the NCAA meet. "I was pleased," he said "I was so high from the first day, I didn't care. I just wanted to get the jumps in."

Harrison said head track and field coach

Steve Miller was the main influence in his jumping.

"He's been very close to me. I know that in football and basketball, you really don't get as close to your coach," Harrison said. "I don't know how many people can actually say they love their coach, but I actually do love Coach Miller. I think that's a positive part and it makes me do things that I don't think I can do."

Harrison said his closeness with Miller began when he was a freshman. Miller went with him to Olympic trials and to the General Electric national meet.

Even though Miller will be be leaving coaching to devote his energies to the position of assistant athletic director next year, Harrison said he hoped Miller would still coach him. "I just don't feel comfortable working with people I don't know and I don't know how their thoughts are."

Harrison prepares himself for the long jump by mentally imagining what his jump will look like.

"When I'm first standing at the end of the runway, I just think of the jump itself," he said. "I picture what I'm going to do in the air and how I'm going to land. When I come down the runway, I think of nothing. I'm blank, I just try to stay focused to the end of the pit. Once I get right in front of the board, it's like I wake up and I can see everything. And when I plant my foot, there's not much else I can do except land."

Although Harrison hopes to compete on the U.S. team in Europe and Japan this summer, he said he didn't plan to take any time off from college to compete.

"The competition is right here in college," he said. "Plus I'm getting my education and I'll be finished with that early. Then I can go on and see what I can do." Harrison is working toward a spot on the 1988 Olympic team.
"I'm taking it one step at a time," he said. "I want to make the team. I think it's a goal that I can shoot for. I had doubts earlier in the season when I jumped 24-7. I thought, 'that's not going to cut the mustard.' Then I just started jumping farther and getting stronger and getting better, and now — if I keep progressing the way I have — I'll be right in the picture."

Harrison also competes in the 200-meter dash, mile relay and the spring relay.

"Those aren't really major things, they just work on my speed for the jumping events. I really don't look at them as getting competitive because I know there are a lot of people who just specialize in those Harrison said after college he plans to continue to compete.

"I plan to go on the circuit and travel around the world, and see things I haven't seen before. And then after I get my fill of that I'd like to work for a corporation in

Golfers ready to open season

Men's team returns two

By KEVIN KNAUS Collegian Reporter

The K-State men's golf season begins March 27, when the Wildcats are scheduled to meet Washburn and Fort Hays State at Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction

Coach Ray Wauthier said the team should do well against Washburn and Fort Hays State, but much of the success of the team will depend on the younger players on

"We only have two players returning from last year, Jim Fiscella and Jack Day. Both are experienced players having been on the team for three years," Wauthier said.

The team has four new players who have little experience on the collegiate level. Daran Neuschafer, freshman; Curt Fowler, freshman; Denny Pickett, sophomore; and K.C. Byrne, junior. "Every kid has a chance to play in the meet, it just depends on how well he shoots in the qualifying rounds," Wauthier said.

Wauthier said the players will play 36 holes to determine which five players will go to the tournament at Rolling Meadows. For the tournaments following that, the decision will be made on the basis of the play in the previous tournaments.

The players for the Big Eight Conference the basis of who has played best during the season, Wauthier said.

Wauthier said Oklahoma State and Oklahoma, who finished one-two last year, should be the top teams in the Big Eight again this year.

Oklahoma State should be the top team in the Big Eight led by Scott Verplank. Verplank recently won the Western Open in the PGA. The money he won was put in a trust fund so as to keep his amateur standing allowing him to play on the collegiate

"We are hoping to finish sixth this season which is realistic if we shoot what our capabilities are," Wauthier said.

Fiscella said the team lost one of its experienced players from last fall, leaving only himself and Day with most of the tournament experience. This means the less experienced players are going to be relied on

"We finished eighth in the Big Eight Tournament last fall, but hope to do better this spring," said Fiscella.

"We are inexperienced, but once the younger guys get used to playing in tournaments we could do well.

Neuschafer said the younger players just need to improve on their consistency.

"Jack and Jim are very consistent, however our less experienced players are going to have to shoot low numbers more consistently," he said. This season is Wauthier's last at K-State.

He is retiring after 37 years at the Universi-Tournament, April 16-18, will be chosen on ty, including the past six as men's golf "It will be a shame to see him go, he has been a good coach and a part of K-State for 37 years," Fiscella said.

Tough tourneys ahead

By JIM LUNDSTROM Collegian Reporter

The upcoming women's golf season is going to be challenging, according to Robert Sedorcek, head women's golf coach at K-State.

"It won't be an easy season. The season starts with a tournament at North Texas State and there will be a lot of good teams there, such as Oklahoma and Oklahoma State," Sedorcek said.

The season won't get easier after the North Texas State Tournament, Sedorcek said, because the next tournament will be the Susie Maxwell Tournament at the University of Oklahoma.

Following the Susie Maxwell Tournament, K-State will host a tournament at the Manhattan Country Club. Sedorcek said he believes this tournament, which will host 10 teams, will determine how well the Wildcats will do in Big Eight Conference competition. Sedorcek also said another year of experience will help them as a team. There are five women on the team now, and next year Sedorcek hopes to add five more. Only five team members are allowed to participate in each tournament, but many teams have up to 10 women who may play throughout the season. Sedorcek anticipates another fine season for senior Sherry Dercher, who had the lowest average last season. Susan Navrot also had a low average last year, and Sedorcek is looking for a good season from

"I'm looking for Sherry and Susan to play well this year. This is Sherry's last year and she is ready to play," Sedorcek said. "Susan is one of our stronger players,"

Sedorcek said. "She doesn't have to work as hard to keep her swing, and this is an advantage because she can concentrate on other aspects of the game such as putting." Another year of experience will help the Wildcats as a team, according to Sedorcek.

"These five women know they are going to play in all the tournaments, so there is no pressure in competing against each other for a position to play, as there is on teams with 10 members," Sedorcek said. The bad weather has caused the Wildcats to fall behind other teams, Sedorcek said, and may pose a problem as far as getting experience for tournaments. "Other teams have been practicing since January, but we can't practice that early because of the cold weather," Sedorcek said. "Teams in the southern regions have the warm climate and can practice earlier than we can."

Sedorcek said he is looking for more improvement this fall than he has seen in the

"Practices have been going well up to this point, and I'm looking for more improvement from the team as the season progresses," Sedorcek said.

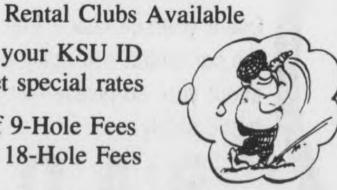

The women will compete in the Big Eight Conference Tournament April 28-29 in Lin-

Tennis teams meet adversity Swedes to lead women

By TONY CARBAJO Sports Writer

After finding out the men's tennis team will no longer be playing next year, the women's tennis team will be fighting to build a strong program of their own this spring to keep from meeting a similar fate. The women's team, seventh place finishers in the Big Eight Conference Tournament last season, are fielding what Coach Steve Bietau believes is "the best women's team we have ever had here."

Since last season, Bietau has added new members to the No. 1 through No. 4 positions on the team. Heading that group is Palm Beach Junior College transfer Lena Svensson, an all-American out of the juco ranks, has played at No. 1 since arriving last fall. She has already surpassed Bietau's expectations and has beaten some of the top competition in the Midwest.

Holding down the No. 2 spot on the roster is another Swedish performer, Sigrid Ivarsson, Ivarsson, a freshman, stepped into the program this fall and has played the second spot all year. In Bietau's view, she has the ability to someday be a Big Eight

The other new faces on the squad are Annika Emtell, a freshman and the third Swede on the team, and Kristy Line, a freshman from Russell.

"I feel comfortable where we are in singles," Bietau said of this year's roster. "All the girls have the potential to help us and we are going to need help from ever-

Currently holding down the top doubles spot is the team of Ivarsson and Emtell.

The duo were teammates in high school back in Danderyd, Sweden. Doubles will be an area of great importance for the women this spring, according to Bietau.

"The doubles will be the key," Bietau said about the upcoming league play. "That is where we stand to improve the most. The girls have already made steady progress in singles, so doubles will be the key to the rest of the season."

Another new face this spring, but not to the program, is that of Carlye Madelen. Madelen, who played some on last year's squad, did not take part in the fall season. Bietau believes that she is playing some outstanding tennis right now.

"Carlye Madelen is a girl to watch out for." Bietau said. "She is in her last year and she has a good chance to go a long way in the confrence at the spot (No. 5) she is playing. She used to play at No. 2, so she should be able to do some damage down there at five."

The team is hoping to jump two or three spots in the Big Eight Tournament this year, although Bietau knows it will be extremely tough.

"We have an outside chance at fourth or fifth if we play well," he said about the team's tournament hopes.

'Air Parrish' about ready to takeoff

By DAVID SVOBODA Editor

The first flight of Air Parrish is now boarding at KSU Stadium and will take off this afternoon with the beginning of spring

With the beginning of football's "rites of spring" today, new K-State Coach Stan Parrish will get his first on-field look at the Wildcat team he inherited Dec 9 was hired as Jim Dickey's replacement.

Parrish said spring practice should serve three basic purposes, all hopefully leading to the same desired result - a winning

"No. 1, we want to get our personnel placed properly and evaluate the people in the program," Parrish said. "Secondly, we want to implement our offensive and defensive systems - we don't want to rush through them. We want to take a good foundation out of the spring that we can build

"And, finally, to do all of this we want to create a very positive atmosphere and a very positive attitude with our team - an attitude where they are going to go to the field expecting to win, not wondering whether or not they are going to win."

In addition to getting to know his players, Parrish is also going to have his first onfield chance to get to know the work habits of those assistants he hired who have not worked with him in the past.

"If your staff has a common philosophy and common work habits, the transition becomes a very, very smooth one. I think that is the head coach's job," Parrish said. "I have to formulate my philosophy with them, formulate good work ethic on and off

New head football coach Stan Parrish hopes to get the Wildcats' morale up following a dismal 1985 season. The team begins spring practice today.

"I think players know when there is good organization and professionalism in the program, and that kind of thing has a positive impact on the players. I think that will happen here. I have a lot of confidence in our coaching staff."

Although Parrish is excited about the players he recruited to come to K-State for the fall, he believes the nucleus of a winning team was here when he arrived.

'The basis of us winning or losing is here right now. We'll see in spring practice where we're a little thin and where we are going to need a little help in the depth situation," Parrish said.

Parrish also noted that all of the players, returnees included, would have to prove themselves in order to gain a starting role. "All of the positions are up in the air. I'm very optimistic that the new system...will bring out the best in some of these people. The positions are totally up for grabs, and the guys that compete best are going to be our starters," he said.

Parrish said a typical practice day during spring workouts will consist of 45 minutes of meetings and "specialty period" before each practice and two hours of practice itself. He was quick to note that no meetings would be scheduled during times that might interfere with class time or nightly studies. Workouts will be like building blocks in that a little bit more of the new offensive and defensive philosophy will be added each session, he said.

"We're in a 'part-whole' kind of teaching progression where you have to teach and master the parts before you can learn the whole," Parrish said. "When you put the offense and defense together, it is important that the players know what 'A' was before you go to 'B' - and I think good coaching is knowing that the players understand where you're at.'

Although the immediate focus of the spring workouts will be readying the squad for the April 26 spring game against the alumni team, which will feature Steve Grogan, Lynn Dickey, Gary Spani and Paul Coffman, Parrish said the long-term focus is the most important.

"We want a full house in this stadium on Aug. 30 (the date of K-State's home opener), and to do that we're going to have to work hard to create excitement. This generation relates to that and we hope to

U.S. jets respond to Libyan attack

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American warplanes knocked out a Libyan missile site and disabled two guidedmissile patrol boats on Monday after Libya fired at least six missiles at U.S. jets operating below Col. Moammar Khadafy's "line of death" in the Gulf of Sidra, administration officials said.

Some might argue differently, but to won't tolerate 'losers'

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

Gary Vaught's ice blue eyes don't like to look at losers. In fact, Gary Vaught doesn't like to be around losers one bit. "My No. 1 philosophy is winning whether it is building a barn or raking the yard. When you walk into my office, the first thing you see is 'w-i-n.' I hate losers. I will not be associated with losers on or off the field. If the shoe fits, you've got to wear

it. If you're a loser, you've got to go somewhere else," Vaught said. Vaught is K-State's baseball coach and this "must-be-a-winner" attitude he has brought to the Wildcat baseball program shows

Vaught believes in this year's Wildcat team. A tougher schedule than K-State has faced in many years and an outstanding recruiting class has generated a respectable record against some highly respected

'Our kids are cocky, they're arrogant that's the way I want them to be and they deserve to be. If you write down who we have played - Arkansas is ranked, Lamar is ranked, LSU (Louisiana State) is ranked and (Texas) Tech is ranked and the kids are 10-8 (as of March 20). So, why shouldn't they be a little cocky?" Vaught said.

Last season Vaught came to K-State from Connors (Okla.) Junior College where he had compiled an impressive 305-57 record - at a program which Vaught himself calls "the laughing stock of Oklahoma jucos" prior to his reign.

The challenge was gone for Vaught at Connors and the thought of building another program was very appealing, so Vaught made the move up to the National Collegiate Athletic Association at a program which like Connors had had little past Vaught was not afraid to shake things up, either. When he first came to K-State, he moved all of the players down to the second team "to see if they were fighters." And, he found who were the fighters - the Vaughtversion Wildcats only have three players remaining from the pre-Vaught years.

High on Vaught's agenda was to schedule tougher competition, proving to doubters K-State can play baseball with the best teams in the nation.

"They gave me an opportunity to come here. And, to recruit here I had to show people that Kansas State was not afraid of playing top notch programs," Vaught said.

Vaught started shopping for players who were going to help him field a winning team as quickly as possible.

"We had to go out and get junior college kids so we could have immediate success,' Vaught said.

Some of the junior college talent Vaught has brought ranks with the very best in the nation. This talent includes catcher Jeff Turtle, who last year at Connors was a first-team junior college all-American and is currently hitting .411, which is eighth best in the nation.

Last season, Vaught's numbers were the worst he had ever compiled as a coach. Despite making a trip to the post-season Big Eight tournament - a rarity for K-State - the 29-33 record did not please Vaught at all.

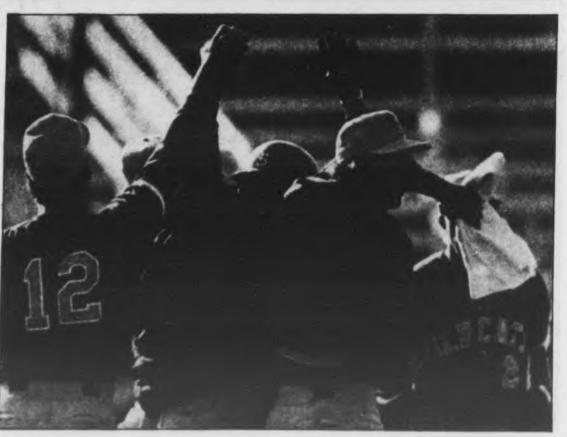

"I came in to Kansas State never having had coached or played on a losing team. Going 29-33 and making the (Big Eight) post-season tournament to people here was like going to the World Series - to me it was very disappointing," Vaught said.

"I was disappointed in first of all losing

RIGHT: K-State baseball team members celebrate during Sunday's win over Creighton University at Frank Myers Field. The team is expected to do well in the conference race.

Vaught said. With the success of the baseball program, Vaught believes the entire finances of the athletic department will be supdays away.

"I think we can pick up the slack...we can help Kansas State athletics. I believe enough in Kansas State fans. If we win they'll show up. I believe in Kansas State. I believe in the direction were going in," Vaught said.

Gary Vaught the K-State baseball team and athletic department are not losing. If the two were losers, Gary Vaught wouldn't be around to see it.

'Cats hope to continue road back

By DAVID SVOBODA Editor

After an early season schedule that consisted of games with 10 National Collegiate Athletic Association teams, K-State will move into the Big Eight Conference portion of the schedule this weekend as they travel to Lincoln, Neb., for a series against the Cornhuskers.

The team that Coach Gary Vaught takes into Nebraska is one that he feels possessses a good balance of speed and power offensively. Vaught has also been impressed with the team's starting pit-

A position-by-position look at the Wildcats follows, with the starters listed

CATCHER - Jeff Turtle is the starter. Turtle came to K-State from Connors State Junior College in Oklahoma, the school Vaught left to take the K-State job. Turtle has supplied the power for K-State thus far this spring, hitting six home runs in games played through March 23.

Turtle's backup catcher is Dan Skalla, a freshman that Vaught says "needs work, but will be a fine collegiate catcher in time."

FIRST BASE/DESIGNATED HITTER - Mike Hamacher and Otto Kaifes are splitting time between duties at these two positions. Hamacher, a junior transfered to K-State before the fall campaign from Mesa Junior College in Colorado.

Kaifes was an honorable mention all-Big Eight selection last season, despite missing the end of the year with a shoulder injury.

SECOND BASE - The battle at this position, according to Vaught, "has really been a struggle." Brent Gibson, Guy Greco and Leo Seiler all have shown strong points during the course of the spring campaign.

All three are transfers, Gibson and Greco from junior colleges and Seiler from a National Collegiate Athletic Association Division II school.

SHORTSTOP - Pat Stivers has emerged as the starter here. Stivers is yet another juco transfer. The junior hit .400 at Pratt Community College last season.

THIRD BASE - Sophomore Jim Donohue has emerged as the starter here, and Eric Haines is just one-half year away from establishing himself as a solid player, Vaught said.

Donohue was a multi-sport letterman in high school. Haines came to K-State from Connors State, and is one of 13 newcomers on this year's squad. OUTFIELD - Scott Gilbert, Gary Pridey, Mike Hinkle, Kevin Ellis and Tom Parsons lead a strong K-State outfield corps. Gilbert was converted to the outfield from first base, and Vaught said he has made a smooth transition. "Scott was one of the best first basemen in the league last year, and he could have been this year - but we needed him more in the outfield," Vaught said. Pridey, a senior, was one of K-State's few returning starters. The Kansas City, Kan. native was a three-sport letterman in high school at Bishop Ward. Hinkle is also a Kansas City, Kan. native. At Kansas City Community College he also recorded a 15-4 pitching record in addition to being named Kansas Junior College Scholar Athlete with a 3.80 grade point average in 1985.

day at Frank Myers field. K-State won, 6-5. The 'Cats' next game

Creighton University's Chris Gadsden attempts to slide into second under the throw of K-State second baseman Guy Greco Sun-

Ellis saw limited action for the Wildcats in 1985, hitting .210 in 18 games. Ellis, a senior, won three letters in baseball and two in football in high school. Parsons is one of 13 newcomers to the

Wildcat program. The junior set a season high school record by hitting 15 homers during his senior year at Las Animas High School in Fort Lyon, Colo. STARTING PITCHING - K-State has used a five-man rotation for much of the early spring campaign. Included in that rotation were Rocky Ferguson, Scott Lichlyter, Tom Smith, Robby Gwinn and Wally Bramlage.

Ferguson is another K-State newcomer. The junior transfer from Kansas City Kansas Community College recorded a 2.37 earned run average and 24 strikeouts during the fall campaign.

Lichlyter, a senior from Derby, is one of the few Wildcats who has been at K-State for more than two seasons, having played for coaches Dave Baker, Bill Hickey and Vaught. He registered nine strikeouts and a 0.90 ERA in 10 innings of fall work.

Smith was a first-team all-Big Eight selection in 1985, as he set new K-State records in complete games (11) and innings pitched (114).

Guinn was the third member of the K-State rotation in 1985, leading the staff in complete games with six. Bramlage, along with Lichlyter, has and is a two-year letterwinner at K-State. RELIEF PITCHING - The relief corps consists of Marty Darnell, Brad Harvick, Paul Iseman and Jeff Peterson.

All in all, Vaught thinks unity will be the key to success or failure in 1986

Players reeling from decision

By RON RENO Collegian Reporter

The feeling among members of the K-State women's softball team is that this year's team could be the most talented and successful club in recent years. That has all changed.

That optimism has been dampened by the realization that no matter how successful the team is, it is the last softball team at K-State. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has decided to drop the program in a cost-cutting move aimed at bolstering other areas of the athletic pro-

Despite this, Coach Ralph Currie said he sees considerable improvement in a team which finished last in the Big Eight Conference last year. Currie, who calls his club "just a pretty darn solid ball team," said he set two goals for the team at the beginning of the season. The first goal is to win one of the tournaments in which the team participates in during the season.

The other is to finish in the top three in the Big Eight - an ambitious goal considering the Big Eight is acknowledged as the toughest softball conferences in the nation. One recent poll published by the National Collegiate Athletic Association listed five of the seven competing members of the conference in its Top 20.

Currie believes one of the team's biggest strengths is its defense.

After the team's first road trip of the year, Currie said, "The defense was outstanding. The only thing we didn't do was hit when we needed to hit.'

Even though the team lost all five of its games on the road trip, Currie was encouraged by the club's performance. Currie cited a 10-inning, one-run defeat to nationally ranked Oklahoma as evidence of the team's capabilities. The team, which has only two seniors and three juniors, is not suffering from a lack of experience according to Currie. 'Every one of our sophomores played a lot of ball last year. Two of our strongest ball players are freshmen," he said. The two freshmen are Vicki Fund, a pitcher from Topeka, and third baseman Jill Kennedy from Omaha. Currie calls Fund "a tremendous prospect." She pitched both a four- and a five-hitter during the recent road trip. Currie also said Kennedy is already "one of the best third basemen in the Big Eight."

The K-State coach is "tickled to death" by the consistent defensive play of sophomore Janet Fortner at shortstop, a position which was a trouble spot last year. Another strength which Currie mentioned is junior pitcher Lisa Tarvestad, who he commended for her performance in the narrow extra-inning loss to Oklahoma.

Currie said lack of hitting is still a primary concern as it was last year, but he does see some signs of improvement. He said that while it did not show in the statistics, the team hit the ball harder in the latter games of the recent road trip.

Still, he said he is counting on sophomore infielder Rita McClure and junior outfielder Joyce Hawley to shoulder much of the offensive burden.

McClure was the leading hitter on the team last year. Hawley, who Currie mentioned as one of the team leaders, is also considered a legitimate candidate for all-

Big Eight by Currie Currie said the team's two seniors, outfielder Chris Haller and infielder Sandy Sasser, are "steadying influences" on the young club. "They're not noisy, but they're good leaders," he said. He also said Hawley has assumed one of the leadership positions on the team. Hawley was the team's third leading hitter last year. Currie said the team's reaction to the athletic department's recent decision has been mixed. "Some of the girls have responded positively and some have kind of thrown up their hands," Currie said.

ded incentive to play well.

Some of the players have seen it as an ad-

"It makes us mad. It makes us want to try harder," said pitcher Tarvestad. "This year they've given us added incentive. We're ready to show everybody we can compete," Hawley added.

It has also had some negative effects on the team as well.

Senior Haller said she "saw it come out on the field" a few times on the recent road trip in a few lapses of concentration

Aside from the recent controversy, team members believe the team is drastically improved from the one that went 11-23 last

Hawley, who is on the team for her third year, said, "This year it seems like we have a lot more talent than any of the years I have been here."

"Last year we weren't even half this good," Tarvestad added.

Two aspects mentioned by many members of the team as being the biggest strengths are the confidence each player has in all the others and a sense of team

The players agreed that while the decision by the athletic department has affected the team, they still hope to have a successful season.

"There is no use being upset about it because there is nothing we can do about it," Haller said. The team begins the Big Eight season on Friday, April 4 at home against Nebraska.

Club squads working toward national meets

By JIM LUNDSTROM Collegian Reporter and RON RENO Collegian Reporter

The following is a look at K-State's three major club sports - soccer, crew and rugby:

K-State Soccer Club coach Manfred "Clay" Ross said he has high expectations for his team and believes the squad will be ready this weekend as it opens the season against the University of Nebraska at Lin-

"I've got a lot of high goals this season. We have nine out of 11 players returning and we also have nine seniors on our starting team now," Ross said.

Another advantage for the Wildcats is that the team's added depth will allow Ross to keep talented, fresh players available for play at any time during a game. Ross said he has picked up several freshmen this season, as well as other players who know how to play the game and will help build a strong team. "We have a minimum of 17 quality players who know how to play the game, and this is stronger than we've ever been," Ross said.

Although the Wildcats had a winning season last year, Ross expects the team's record to improve this year.

'We have so much momentum coming in from last season. The guys have had a couple of seasons playing together as a team as well as a couple of seasons playing my type of ball and knowing what I expect out of them," Ross said.

The weather has been a serious factor, Ross said, because the team can't practice when the field is muddy. Rain has been the main problem, but Ross is positive about the performance of the players at this

"We scrimmaged Thursday and I was very impressed. The guys are a real dedicated bunch, and I feel we will represent ourselves well against the competition this season," Ross said. The Wildcats will play their first home game April 5 against Oklahoma State University. Ross said he is hoping for a large crowd because it is the weekend of Open House.

The K-State crew team has set its sights on the national championships which will be in May. In order to compete there, the squad must do well at the Midwest Regional Championship in Madison, Wis., on April 26. Barbara Foote, vice president of the team, said about 60 people are currently participating. The team, which is coached by Don Rose, has three men's and two women's crews.

one coxswain, Foote said. She also said there is both a spring and a fall season, but the fall one is used more for training, teaching and practice. The team's first competition this spring was the Heart of Texas Regatta during spring break. Four of the five crews placed third in their races, according to Foote,

Each crew consists of eight rowers and each crew to succeed, there must be a team

"It's teamwork. It's everyone together. That's the only way we're going to win," Foote said.

"It's hard work, but it's also fun," Foote The team's next competition will be Saturday at home against Washburn.

Members of the K-State Rugby Football Club are beginning a season in which they hope to duplicate the success of years past. The team's main goal is to represent the Heart of America Union in the Western Territorial Championship as they did last

The team was 0-2 before playing its third match this past Saturday. Both losses were to club teams, however, which are usually more experienced than collegiate teams. The team, which also has a fall season, plays nine matches this spring. If it wins the Heart of America Union again, then it advances to the Western Territorial Championship in New Mexico in mid-April.

The winner of that goes on to meet the winners of the other three U.S. territorial championships in California in May, said Mike Duncan. Duncan, who played rugby for K-State from 1981 through 1985, is a coaching consultant to the team.

He said the main competition in the Heart of America Union is usually between KU and K-State. The two teams play Saturday in Lawrence.

Coach Greg Barnes has been involved with the K-State rugby club for the past 11 years and still plays for the team. The team, which is smaller and faster perience as one of its greatest assets, said Tim Argo at Saturday's game. The club has more than 30 members, practices twice each week, and then plays matches on Saturdays.

WASHINGTON - American warplanes knocked out a Libyan missile site and disabled two guidedmissile patrol boats on Monday after Libya fired at least six missiles at U.S. jets operating below Col. Moammar Khadafy's "line of death" in the Gulf of Sidra, administration officials said.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said the retaliatory strikes had been conducted without any loss of U.S. men or equipment, but presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said "there are no apparent survivors" on one of the Libyan vessels, which he said normally carries a crew of 27.

Both Weinberger and Speakes added the American naval battle group operating off Libya had been placed on what amounted to a war footing.

Libya, meanwhile, in broadcasts on state-run radio that were monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp., vowed to "make the Mediterranean into a sea of fire" and urged attacks on U.S. oil facilities and American workers throughout the Arab world.

In a blunt warning to Libya that the United States does not consider the episode closed, Speakes said, "We now consider all approaching Libyan forces to have hostile intent. He said the U.S. force held its fire until a sixth Libyan missile had been fired at American targets. While he denounced Khadafy's government as "an outlaw regime and up to no good," the presidential spokesman said the United States did not attempt to provoke the Libyans.

"We were there on a peaceful exercise...to transit in international water," he said. "We will continue to operate in those waters," he insisted.

In response to a question, Speakes said, "I can't characterize it as war" between the United States and Libya.

The Soviet Union supplied the SA-5 and SA-2 missiles that Speakes said Libya fired before a U.S. jet aimed a Harpoon anti-ship missile at the Libyan patrol boat. He said the Soviets had been notified when U.S. ships went into the Gulf of Sidra, but declined to say whether there were Soviets operating the missile sites.

"That's for the Libyans to answer," Speakes added.

It was not clear whether President Reagan gave the order to open fire. The president was informed within a half hour after the first U.S. missile was fired.

Three U.S. carrier task forces entered the Gulf of Sidra last weekend to assert the U.S. position that the waters are open to ships of all nations beyond a 12-mile territorial limit.

Earlier Monday, sources who spoke on condition of anonymity had Mediterranean Sea declined to pinpoint the location from which the surface-to-air missiles were fired. However, the Soviets are known to have been assisting the Libyans with the installation of SA-5 batteries outside the town of Sirte, at the southern end of the gulf, and near Benghazi on the gulf's eastern rim.

The Gulf of Sidra is a large, U-shaped body of water that cuts into the central Libyan coastline from the Mediterranean Sea. Khadafy has claimed the gulf as Libyan territory, warning he has drawn "a line of death" above the gulf's entrance below which U.S. planes and ships are subject to attack The United States refuses to

As the situation between the United States and Libya once again heats up in the Gulf of Sidra, local reaction was of doubt as to whether President Reagan is handling the situation correctly

Professor of Political Science Michael Suleiman, who specializes in Middle East affairs, said there is a great deal of background behind the conflict.

"I think normally when there are differences of opinions on what is international waters, people usually do not go to war," Suleiman said. "I think that — as a situation — it isn't just today."

There have been previous accusations that Col. Moammar Khadafy has been trying to assassinate U.S. political leaders. Also there have been reports that President Reagan approved a CIA attempt to topple Khadafy's government, he said.

"It is not new. The U.S. feels that Khadafy is attracted to its own interests and Khadafy feels the same

"Khadafy feels the U.S. is undermining Arab concerns and attempts for Arab countries to unite," Suleiman said.

"There's a conflict where the U.S. wants to maintain the status quo and Khadafy thinks it's not in the best interest of the Arab world."

Suleiman said the question is whether this is likely to weaken the Libyan regime, topple it or make a hero of Khadafy.

"This certainly reinforces his image to stand up against the U.S. If his regime is not weakened or toppled then such an encounter is likely to bring him sympathy and support in the Arab world.

"I think Reagan wanted this confrontation and I wouldn't be surprised that Khadafy also welcomed it.

'This is only short term. I have no idea what they are planning, but I don't think this is the way to go about

A Libyan student at K-State said he could not comment on the situation and could not predict what Khadafy or the United States would do about the situation.

TV bears impact, news anchor says

By TOM SCHULTES

Business/Government Editor Neither television nor its impact on individuals can be ignored, listeners were told during the 71st Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues Monday morning. Tom Brokaw, anchor of "NBC Nightly News," said television is a "reflection on our wide world and how it has gotten smaller."

He said although it may be popular to denegrate the medium - to pretend ignoring it will make it go away - "television will not go away." "It is as unfair to exaggerate the bad manners of television as it is to compare all the intellectual criticisms with the work of say, Rex Reed," Brokaw said. Television is "truly a window to the world...whatever its form," he said.

Brokaw said television as a serious news purveyor first came to the realization of Americans when John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas, making it "a central source of information, solace and continuity." He said the Kennedy assassination was the "seminal event and maturation" of television news.

See related story, Page 5

But, he said, he does not believe television should not be the sole source of information, despite polls indicating two-thirds of the public receives most of its news from the medium. "We cannot fully understand the world in which we live," Brokaw said,

"without reaching out to other sources (of news)." Television "just kind of drifts away...(and) plays more to our hearts than

Brokaw associated the dissemination of television news to the action of a food processor breaking news into "easily digested bits of information."

He also refuted charges the electronic medium has ruined politics, saying charisma has always been an important part of political campaigning.

He said extensive coverage of political conventions and primaries has resulted in an "enhancement of political dialogue," and it is an insult to the electorate to say President Ronald Reagan was elected on imagery alone. Brokaw said he is more concerned with the television marketplace, an "irresistable forum for slick manipulation, especially for candidates of lesser office who can't hide from other forms of scrutiny.' He said he worries about local stations paying little attention to local Brokaw used the example of the election of Lyndon LaRouche supporters on the Democratic Party ticket in Illinois.

"(The media) let down the voters of Illinois...people ought to have the kind of information to make those decisions," he said. Brokaw said the new vehicle for politics is money, through political action committees, or PACs, which evolved through campaign reforms after the "Nixon/Watergate campaigns." He said 25 percent of the PAC funds in the last election went to incumbent legislators.

He said the media must be careful not to abuse the public trust they hold, making people seeking public office the "victims of a kind of a feeding-Brokaw said candidates suitable for office "should not be judged guilty just because they have (chosen to seek public office)." Citing examples of hijackings and the fall of Ferdinand Marcos, Brokaw said television is "one vast electronic theater...and no performer is unaware of the extraordinary reach of television."

He said while people question the propriety of the medium to cover terrorist activities, "it is wrong to assume that television is responsible for the rise of terrorism...the more that we know about terrorists, and their twisted minds...the better we can deal with them.'

Brokaw said one problem is that presidents and their advisers have been too responsive to television deadlines, rushing their judgments to meet the medium's schedules. He said Presidents Carter and Reagan have both been guilty of the act.

Embassy in Japan attacked

By The Associated Press

TOKYO - Rockets were fired early this morning at the U.S. Embassy and the Japanese imperial palace, but none of them caused injuries or damaged any buildings, police said.

Police officials said both of the missiles fired at the embassy landed on a road outside the embassy compound. However, Kyodo News Service, which is located across the street from the embassy, said said one flew over the gate surrounding the embassy and landed in a garden inside the compound.

Kyodo said the homemade explosive in the shape of a wooden cannister burned momentarily after landing, but that the fire was extinguished by embassy personnel.

Several minutes later rockets were fired at the imperial palace about 1.2 miles from the U.S. Embassy, police said. Those rockets also failed to hit any buildings, and there were no injuries or damage.

Police said that in both cases the rockets apparently were launched by remote control from the trunk of a car parked near the target.

They said no one had claimed responsibility for the attack.

U.S. leaders back Reagan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Congressional leaders from both parties rallied around the Reagan administration after Monday's military confrontation with Libya, but some lawmakers worried about the effects on U.S. foreign policy and wondered what Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy might do next.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said after a White House briefing, "The administration's handling of this matter is on the right course. Its actions in protecting America's armed forces in international waters are justified."

Not everyone in Congress agreed, however. "I don't understand what we're trying to prove by risking the lives of American servicemen," said

OPEC summit ends with no results

GENEVA - A marathon OPEC meeting broke up Monday after the cartel's members failed to agree on how to cut oil production in an attempt to reverse the slide in prices.

The collapse of the tumultuous talks sent open-market oil prices into a dive, although industry analysts said OPEC still had a chance of pushing prices back up if it agreed later on deep cuts in production.

The price of the most popular grade of U.S. crude plunged more than $2.50 a barrel to just over $11 in early trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange. But the price later rose back above $12.

A one-sentence OPEC statement issued at the close of the meeting said oil ministers from the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries planned to meet again on April 15 to resume the

The final session ended in turmoil, with the OPEC president, Arturo Hernandez Grisanti of Venezuela, and many other ministers slipping out of the hotel without responding to reporters' questions. The usual post-meeting news conference by the cartel president was canceled with no explanation.

Indian government rejects payment

NEW DELHI, India - The government said Monday a $350 million out-of-court settlement between Union Carbide and private lawyers for victims of the Bhopal chemical plant disaster is too low and "totally unacceptable.

"Union Carbide is taking every step to ensure that the case is settled for a very low amount," said a statement issued by the Ministry of Chemicals and Fertilizers. "The government has not endorsed any settlement on the lines reported in the press. The amount of settlement is inadequate and has always been so and is therefore totally

It issued the statement in response to a news report, confirmed by Union Carbide on Sunday, that the company had reached an agreement with some private lawyers for survivors of the gas leak in December 1984, which is considered to be the world's worst industrial disaster. CBS co-anchor, 'Conan,' to marry

HYANNIS, Mass. - Maria Shriver and Arnold Schwarzenegger are putting the final touches on plans for their wedding, one of two weddings planned by the Kennedy clan on Cape Cod this year.

About 500 guests are expected for the April 26 wedding of the "CBS Morning News" co-anchor and the star of such movies as "The Terminator" and "Conan the Barbarian." Eighty celebrities are already booked into Hyannis hotels, including CBS-TV anchor Dan Rather, The Boston Herald reported Monday.

Meanwhile, Shriver's 28-year-old cousin, Caroline Kennedy, is planning an even larger celebration when she marries Edwin Schlossberg, 40, at a midsummer ceremony.

Television Hall of Fame inducts 7

SANTA MONICA, Calif. - Steve Allen, Jackie Gleason and Mary Tyler Moore were among seven people who became members of the fledgling Television Academy Hall of Fame.

The Hall of Fame inducted them in a ceremony Sunday at the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium attended by 700 people. Former CBS President Frank Stanton also was honored, and posthumously honored were Walt Disney, puppeteer Burr Tillstrom and producer Fred Coe.

Announcing the honors were Ed Asner, Patty Duke, puppeteer Jim Henson, David Letterman, Audrey Meadows, Dianne Sawyer and Dick Van Dyke.

The proceedings were videotaped for broadcast April 21 on NBC. The Hall of Fame was created by the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. Among the 14 people inducted in its previous two years are Lucille Ball, Milton Berle, Walter Cronkite and Rod Serling.

Postmaster alters managerial staff

WASHINGTON - Postmaster General Albert V. Casey, in a reorganization of the U.S. Postal Service, announced Monday the abolition of one of four layers of the mail agency's management.

Casey established 74 divisions, whose managers will report directly to the five regional postmasters general. All officials below the division level will report to the division managers to streamline middlelevel mangement of the agency

"This new setup will make field management decision-making more timely and responsive," Casey said, "eliminating management levels and putting operating management expertise closer to locations where postal service is actually provided."

Under the old setup, there were 42 district offices and 216 sectional centers. Each of the district offices being eliminated has about 10

Spokesman David McLean, general manager of the postal service news division, said no one is expected to be fired because of the con-

He said the field reorganization should be complete by late June. About half of the new division chiefs will be required to move to new locations. Appointment of division managers will be effective March

Zookeeper suffers elephant attack

HOUSTON - A 5-ton elephant wrapped its trunk around a zookeeper's neck, swung him around and slammed him against a wall, but the man escaped serious injury, officials said.

John Werler, director of the Houston Zoo, said the 18-year-old Asian elephant, named Thai, reached over a barricade in an elephant pen and grabbed keeper William J. Neuser on Sunday. Neuser, 27, was watering several female elephants in an adjacent pen at the time. Jesse D. Frederick, who was visiting the zoo Sunday afternoon, went to Neuser's aid when he heard the keeper's screams. Karen Frederick said her husband climbed over a tall fence separating the elephant's pen from the public and then onto a rock in the middle of the pen to distract the elephant from Neuser, who was lying on the ground where the animal had dropped him. She said Neuser escaped when the elephant turned toward her husband.

Werler said Thai was in seclusion because he was in a period of sexual excitement when elephants often become aggressive and Neuser suffered only scrapes and was released after treatment at Hermann Hospital, a hospital spokesman said.

Bill may ensure crime doesn't pay

TOPEKA - Criminals would not be allowed to "sell their stories" and profit from books or movies that depict any part of the crime for which they were convicted, under a bill discussed Monday before the House Committee on Federal and State Affairs.

The bill, sponsored by Reps. Martha Jenkins, R-Leavenworth, and Clint Acheson, R-Topeka, is designed to prevent convicts from cashing in on their crimes and the notoriety which often accompanies especially heinous acts.

The sponsors said their interest in the bill stemmed from the murder of the Herbert Clutter family near Holcomb in 1959, an Emporia minister's murder conviction last year and the international escapades of former state Sen. Paul Hess who last fall fled the country with his three sons in an unsuccessful attempt to avoid prosecution for embezzlement.

"Herb Clutter was a friend of mine and it was personally offensive to me that Truman Capote gained fame and fortune through his book 'In Cold Blood' by dwelling on the misfortune of this family," Acheson told the committee.

Although the bill would not affect an author like Capote, whose best-selling book became a popular movie and rocketed the writer to fame. Acheson said it was important that crime does not pay for

Under the Kansas bill, people in Kansas prisons would be forced to hand over to the Crime Victims Reparations Board any profits or royalties earned from selling their life stories for publication in a book or magazine or for use as the basis of a movie, radio or televi-

When Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, arrived at the University in 1973, he wanted to improve the college's undergraduate and graduate pro-

"I feel we now have one of the best engineering programs in the nation," Rathbone said.

During his tenure, the size of the undergraduate program has nearly tripled from 950 students to 2,600 students.

In addition, the completion of phases I and II of Durland Hall has upgraded the engineering program since he became

Before he became dean, Rathbone headed the Department of Electrical Engineering at the University of Idaho in Moscow from 1968 to 1973. Rathbone attributes the success of the college to the improved teaching, computer and laboratory facilities and the quality students and faculty the University attracts. While Rathbone strives to maintain the quality of excellence in the college, he said the most rewarding aspect of his job is interaction with students. "I really enjoy working with quality young people," he said.

Rathbone said he also enjoys working with the faculty and administration, whom he believes "are not always recognized but they are quality people.

During Rathbone's tenure as dean, students have received numerous scholarships and awards in competition - most notably winning the spacesuit glove design team competition sponsored by NASA and the American Society for Engineering Education in spring 1985.

"We (engineering college) get the best students, and I believe our record speaks for itself," Rathbone said, referring to the University's success in regional and national engineering competition.

Active recruitment and student awareness help draw potential students to see the largest and most comprehensive engineering program in the state, Rathbone said.

"I tell the (prospective) student to come and visit," he said. Despite having the best facilities in Kansas, inadequate funding has hampered the college, Rathbone said.

The low salary base of some professors is supplemented by contributions from the engineering industry and alumni. Professors who receive a supplemental income from such sources are in special professorships, Rathbone said.

"This (supplemental funding) allows us to retain quality professors who might have left K-State because of the low salary base," he said. The ongoing task of maintaining the laboratory facilities, especially the computer software and hardware equipment, also is a problem currently facing the University engineering programs, he said.

"If you could give me enough money, there wouldn't be any problems,' Rathbone said.

Although the college receives gifts and grants from industry, state and federal sources, "funding from the state and other sources has got to be a major emphasis,"

Rathbone said he hopes Phase III of Durland will begin construction in the 1990s as planned.

"I just hope the state will meet the commitments of the University (with adequate funding)," he said.

Rathbone said he plans to remain the dean of engineering for a few more years.

"I might teach or go into research," Rathbone said, referring to his future plans. "I'll cross that bridge when I get to Rathbone has worked for the Westinghouse Electric Corp. and has served as a consultant to numerous industrial firms and government agencies. He is a member of the Industrial Advisory Committee for the City of Manhattan, the Executive Committee of U.S. Engineering Deans, legislative chairperson of the Kansas Engineering Society, and vice chairman of the Commission in Engineering Education for U.S. Land-Grant Colleges and Universities in the United States.

New cancer drugs give hope for cure, institute announces

By The Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. - A new cancer therapy that caused an avalanche of calls from the public when it was announced in December continues to look promising in more recent results, a National Cancer Institute researcher said Monday.

"I think this is a very exciting development," said Dr. Steven Rosenberg, the institute's chief of surgery. "It represents the first example of the ability to use the body's immune system to cause the regression of even very large tumors.'

Rosenberg reported in December that the therapy, used on patients whose cancer had spread and for whom other treatments had failed, shrank the volume of cancer by at least 50 percent in 11 out of 25 pa-The therapy has been used now on a total of 49 patients, in which 18 showed such regression, Rosenberg said at a science writers' seminar sponsored by the American Cancer

With so few patients involved, "that statistically is equivalent so there's been no change" in the response rate, he said.

Regression was seen in all eight cases of advanced kidney cancer, with one cancer and possibly another completely gone, he said. About half the cases of malignant melanoma, a deadly skin cancer, responded similarly to the treatment, and a quarter to a third of patients with colon or rectal cancer responded, he

But he stressed the technique is not ready for use outside of experiments. Dr. Vincent DeVita, director of the cancer institute, said earlier that use of the therapy after surgery in kidney cancer might help prevent deaths from that disease, a toll that now is about 6,000 a year.

The technique, called adoptive immunotherapy, begins with removing white blood cells from the patient. Then the cells are incubated in a substance called interleukin-2, a chemical messenger used by the immune system to coordinate its attack on germs. The incubation turns the ordinary blood cells into roving cancer killers that don't harm normal tissue.

The activated cells are put back into the patient, who also gets interleukin-2 to keep the killer cells active and proliferating.

Rosenberg said one 29-year-old woman whose melanoma had spread to several skin sites went through nine killer cell infusions and 47 doses of interleukin-2, and has been free of the cancer since December 1984.

In other cases the treatment has shrunk or eliminated cancer that spread into the lungs from elsewhere in the body, he said.

Despite such successes, "there are substantial problems associated with this treatment," Rosenberg said. "This certainly is not a cure for cancer in 1986.

Among the problems are its tremendous expense, the fact that most regressions it produces are only partial and the lack of any response at all in more than half the patients, he said.

One patient in the treatment has died, he said. The main side effect is fluid retention, which can cause difficulty in breathing, he said.

Secretary closes U.S., Turkish summit

By The Associated Press

ANKARA, Turkey - The United States and Turkey said Monday they would not reach a new agreement on U.S. bases during Secretary of State George Shultz's visit, but an American official said that was 'no big deal" because the current one remains in force.

Shultz ends three days of talks here Tuesday and will instruct lower-level diplomats to continue trying to settle key issues, a U.S. official said.

"We certainly do not expect an tionship to be extended while we are here," he said.

Turkey wants the revised bases agreement to include more military aid and also seeks a greater share of the U.S. market for its textiles and manufactured clothing. The pact's initial five-year term expired in December, but it continues in effect unless one of the governments gives notice of ending it.

A Foreign Ministry official said even a hoped-for exchange of letters setting up a framework that would agreement to be signed or the rela- ease future discussions was unlikely before Shultz left. He and the U.S. official briefed reporters separately on condition they not be identified.

Both accounts of the meeting Monday between Shultz and Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu indicated the secretary remained firm on what the Turks have identified as a major cause of the impasse: the request for more textile exports.

Shultz has said bluntly while here that major increases are impossible, given the worldwide quota system. Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has focused on the textile issue in an effort to reduce Turkey's $700 million trade deficit with the United States.

The American official cited the continuing nature of the agreement in saying failure to reach agreement was "no big deal."

Washington is eager to reach a settlement, however, so long as it does not require major cost increases at a time of budget austerity.

Turkey, a member of the NATO defense alliance, shares a 280-mile border with the Soviet Union.

The University Convocation lecture tonight, "Food for a Starving Planet," featuring Francis Moore Lappe, will provide insights to a problem that receives much attention at K-State.

The "fourth dimension" was coined by former K-State President James McCain in 1966. Gephardt could challenge Doctor J

WASHINGTON - This column was going to begin with a simple statement: Of all the "unknowns" hankering to be your next president, the one with the best chance may be Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo. But then I read a snippy column by Dave Barry of The Chicago Tribune and realized that I had to detour to my destination.

Barry wrote a piece recently promoting Julius Erving, the basketball star, as his candidate for president in 1988. He made a good case for Doctor J. The first time Mikhail Gorbachev shakes with the Doc and sees his teensy Commie paw disappear into Ewing's wide-wingspread grip, the Cold War will be over. When Gorbachev sees him slam-dunk, he'll pull out of Cuba and Nicaragua and Afganistan so fast it will make heads spin.

But Barry was unwilling to trust his own persuasiveness, so he trashed me and my ilk for publicizing people like Gephardt as presidential possibilities. "In fact," he said, "there is no 'Rep. Gephardt.' He was invented during a drunken gathering of the Established Political Pundits Association as part of an elaborate prank to see if they can cause a totally fictitious character to win the Iowa caucuses.

He is wrong on all counts. Established Political Pundits have vowed not to taste booze until the Chicago Cubs win the World Series. As for promoting "a totally fictitious character" as winner of the Iowa caucuses, that is no challenge. We already have done it twice - with Jimmy Carter in 1976 and George Bush in 1980, neither of whom has been heard of since.

Whether Barry likes it or not, Gephardt is our man for 1988, and he is no fiction. I saw him at breakfast one morning last week, and he is right on schedule to be the "surprise" strongman of the 1988 caucuses.

Who is Gephardt, you ask? He is a 45-yearold St. Louis lawyer now in his 10th year in the House. He has red hair, boyish features and an engine that never stops running. He is chairman of the House Democratic Caucus and a member of the Ways and Means Com-

That would be responsibility enough to keep most people occupied. Gephardt, however, is just a mite more ambitious. He is 30 years younger than Ronald Reagan. But he is two years older than John Kennedy was when he became president - and getting older every day. That gnaws at him.

So he gets on national television news programs at every opportunity as a Democratic spokesman on tax reform, aid-to-Contras or whatever. In 1985, a non-election year, he campaigned in 30 states

How did he do it? He says he was in Washington three or four days a week, depending on the House schedule. The other weekdays and three out of four weekends each month, he was on the road. He has an advantage in working Iowa, the site of the first 1988 delegate caucuses, because Ozark Airlines runs frequent flights from St. Louis to Des Moines. He can pop up there in 45 minutes, spend an afternoon or evening with some Iowa Democratic activists, and be back in his district before anyone knows he has been gone

When columnist George F. Will asked him recently how a man with a wife and three children, ages 15, 12 and 8, could run for president in this marathon contest, Gephardt's quoted answer was, "I don't know." But when I asked a similar question, he said his family has agreed to his stepping up his already breakneck schedule. "I'm spending two days a week in the House, four days on the road and part or most of each Sunday with my family.'

On the days he is in the House, he is systematically canvassing his Democratic colleagues for support of his presidential bid. He is getting pledges from many - mainly in the South and border states, but also in the Midwest and on both coasts.

They like the idea of a House member running for president. They like him. They know no one will outwork him. They think his moderate stands on most issues will make sense to the voters. They like being asked for their support. And they appreciate the point he makes to each of them that he will remember their help and solicit their views when he is president

He is closer to putting together a national political organization - through his House allies - than his status as a political unknown would allow anyone to guess. If his constant cultivation of Iowa Democrats paws off in a win or a surprisingly good second place in the first contest of 1988, he will have a national network of credible political supporters ready to tell startled voters, "Of course I know him. I've been for him for a long time." If Gary Hart had had such allies in 1984, when he was the Iowa surprise, he would have been the Democratic nominee. The morning I saw Gephardt, he had the flu. He should have been home in bed. Instead, he had a day of meetings and an evening fund-raiser ahead. He is going to be the tiredest 48-year-old in America if and when he reaches the White House.

He cannot rest and he cannot resist any challenge. When I saw him, I had not read Barry's column. Now that Gephardt is aware of it, I am sure there will be a basketball hoop in his backyard and 15 minutes of practice added to the daily schedule. If it's slamdunks the nation wants, he will deliver.

Caution underscores Hinckley's freedom

John Hinckley, who wounded President Reagan and seriously injured White House Press Secretary James Brady and two should not be granted additional others on March 30, 1981, said he freedoms in his current state of wants to be allowed to walk the mind. streets of Washington, D.C., once a month without an escort.

A U.S. District judge on Monday refused to grant that request and another appeal to be transferred out of a maximum security section of the Washington hospital to which he is confined.

Denial of Hinckley's requests is proper. It is almost inconceivable that the court system would permit such a disturbed individual to have access to Washington where Reagan and Congress conduct the business of this nation or any other city for that matter.

Hinckley testified that he is healthy, but his doctors said he still has mental problems and

Reagan rebounded from the incident in fine fashion. Hinckley's recovery will take much longer. Hinckley, his doctors and the courts should be extremely careful not to make hasty decisions in this case.

He was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the assassinaton attempt and such a drastic revision of the conditions of his incarceration should not be made until he has regained control of his mind.

Putting a coat of paint on everyone's troubles

What did you do over spring break? No one could have possibly had the exhilarating, breathtaking vacation I had. Yes, I had the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to paint ceiling molding in the privacy of my own home.

It was just me, a 2-inch nylon brush and a bucket of paint for three straight days. But wait, there's more. If you order now, you can receive a 21-year-old K-State senior who slices, dices and is willing to sharpen Ginsu knives at no cost

If you guessed I was a domestic creature during the holiday, you win the prize. But take heart, something good did come of my slavery. As I stood in the den, slopping "antique white" on the shelving, listening to a series of commercials for the 75th time - it hit me

For months now I've been racking my brain, trying to come up with a fun topic to write about. I came to the realization that if the own creative juices aren't flowing and mind-altering drugs are out of the question, the only option left is to steal someone else's

You've heard someone say it: "OOOooo, I hate it when that happens." You know, like when you take a 6-inch replica of the Empire State Building and shove it in one ear and out the other. I always have hated that. Anyway, the paint fumes must have engaged my brain into deep thought because I started thinking on the more provincial situations we all

"hate." Hate is such a strong word, but it just doesn't sound right: "I dislike it a lot when that happens." So for the sake of literary flow, we'll stick to the "h" word.

Don't you hate it when you're walking in the Union cafeteria, with everybody staring, and you trip, possibly over some fallen particle of today's luncheon entree? Then your friends call you "Grace" for the rest of your collegiate career. I hate that.

SALLY TRAEGER Guest Columnist

And how about when you put on your new white, all-cotton shirt and hold the freshly printed Collegian under your arm on the way to school? Oooo, that's a drag. I hate that.

Oh, and when you stay up until 3 a.m. studying for your 8:05 a.m. test and sleep through three alarms. Bad news. And later that day you go to a 1:30 p.m. class, get there a minute late, sit in the front row and catch up on missed sleep.

Faculty members can identify with certain dreaded situations. This one is for all our instructors who spend 40 percent of their paychecks on dry cleaning. Don't you hate it when you're using the chalkboard to illustrate a point, and get a big, white line across your seat for the remainder of the day? Now if I were an instructor, I would definitely hate that.

I guess I hate it most when I go to the Union on the way to Student Senate meetings to get a soda, and they're out of the "good" ice - you know, the kind that's good to chomp on. I could provide more illustrations of my point, but why ponder the negative? Economic theory awaits real test

The headline just grabbed me - "Supplyside theory fails in practice." Now I'm no economist, but I know one thing to be a fact: The actions of President Reagan and the Congress these last four years have been no true test of supply-side economic theory.

And I know something else - one should not judge the validity of a theory on an experiment which is woefully executed.

First, the tax break was phased in. Would you make major financial decisions because of a 5 percent tax break the first year when you knew a 10 percent break would follow the next year, and another 10 percent break the year after that?

No, chances are you would postpone your decision to get the full benefit of the entire 25 percent cut.

Had the president, and the Congress, made it a 20 percent cut in one year, the economy would have picked up much more quickly than it did, and we would not have seen the sluggish recovery while revenues fell from the piecemeal cuts. President Kennedy knew that, and that's why his tax cut worked.

Supply-side economic theory should not be blamed for the deficit. Though it predicts an increase in tax revenues, most economists would agree that this would only be possible under a sensible and serious tax system. Massive tax reform is needed.

Any tax system that allows tax deductions for mortgages on vacation homes, for investments on race and show horses and for interest on debt while taxing interest income (thereby fostering debt instead of savings) is inequitable at best and unproductive at investment and production, not savings. Savings in banks do not necessarily fuel the economy - investments do. The daily records set by the stock market show that many sectors of the economy are going rather well, thank you.

Supply-side economic theory also favors

The theory does not promise to stave off the decline in the industrial sector of the U.S. economy. The decline in American manufacturing is a structral fact spawned from the internationalization of the division of labor and of the marketplace. Though we might have lost 2.3 million jobs in manufacturing, we have increased employment in other sectors by 10 million jobs over the last four

In reality, the theory has absolutely nothing to do with a spiraling defense budget. No further comment really needs to be made on this point.

Similarly, supply-side economic theory should not be blamed for the increase in America's trade deficit. If another country can produce comparable goods at a cheaper price, why shouldn't they sell them here?

If things are so tough here, where do we get all this money to buy these foreign goods? Also, the theory should not be blamed for the farm problems. Overproduction, coupled with overextended credit, are the root causes of our farm problems.

And finally, the theory should not be blamed for the phenominal rise in Third World debt. Neither should it be blamed for the rise in AIDS and devil worship (I thought those would be the next items on the list).

The bottom line is : Do not judge the validity of a theory, whether in economics, chemistry or physics, on an "experiment" which is conducted poorly.

Just as Reagan should not credit supplyside economic theory with the incredible decrease in inflation, the great increase in the total number of jobs in America and the current stock market explosion, his critics should not blame the decline in manufacturing, the deficts and out-of-control defense spending on the theory. In the same vein, one should not judge the validity of Marxist theory by the despotic and dictatorial regimes who have claimed to implement that theory.

Forty-four years of Keynesian economics and New Deal liberalism have done little to help the poor or to change inefficiencies in the economy

Why not try truly implementing supplyside economic theory by reducing defense spending, by cleaning up the mess of a tax code we have and by fostering productive work rather than unproductive transfer payments? Then, and only then, should we begin to judge the theory. Donald T. Smith is a graduate in history.

Copper 'man' takes heat as environmental test mannequin

By PAT HUND Collegian Reporter

Although Sam the Copper Man may be a 90-pound weakling and a dummy, the Environmental Research Institute has learned much about thermoregulation in the human body from the copper manne-

Byron Jones, associate professor of mechanical engineering and director of the institute, said Sam is invaluable because the mannequin can measure heat loss in various types of clothing and environmental settings.

"I can then determine how much insulation that clothing provides," Jones said. "I also can see how a certain environment affects him."

Sam the Copper Man is one of four remaining copper mannequins in use which test different clothing types and environmental evaluations.

Jones said about 10 copper mannequins were built in the 1950s primarily for military testing.

'The military really has to screen the best type of clothing when they buy for millions of soldiers, because they want to get what is best for everybody," he said.

The copper mannequins were designed from a plaster sculpture of a human body. A wax mold was then patterned after the sculpture, and copper was electroplated on the wax dummy, Jones said.

After the dummy was fitted with a copper shell, the wax inside was melted, leaving a hollowed-out copper body.

The inside of the body is equipped with heating wires and temperature sensors in 17 different locations.

"These elements give the copper mannequin the same body temperature as a human," Jones

Testing clothing on Sam is only one of several steps when experimenting with different types of fabrics, Jones

First, the fabric is tested for its ability to protect the body from moisture and air.

The material is put on the copper mannequin and tests are conducted to determine how well the clothing protects the mannequin under different atmospheric conditions such as wind and outdoor temperature.

This testing is done in a chamber where atmospheric conditions can be controlled. The walls, floors and ceilings are separately water-jacketed, and the temperature of the water is controlled to allow varying temperatures for various experiments on Sam.

The institute also has incorporated sweating in the mannequin, which is the main physical mechanism for thermoregulation, Jones said.

Covering Sam with a wet cotton skin simulates the sweating process.

"Sweating in cold weather might be more important to the design of the clothing than in hot weather, because the clothing loses some of its heat value when it gets wet in cold weather," Jones said. Sweating occurs in cold weather when people overdress, he said.

After the clothing is tested on Sam, modifications are made to further improve the effectiveness of the protective clothing.

The clothing can then be tested on humans in the same simulated environment in which Sam was tested to determine its effectiveness.

Jones said it is more difficult to test humans because they all react differently. Another problem is that humans are influenced by different "Someone may have been drinking the night before, and they will have a different response than someone else who didn't," Jones said.

The clothing is tested in limitedscale field testing when all laboratory modifications are made, he said.

Jones said Sam is currently being used for a project conducted by Elizabeth McCullough, associate professor of clothing and textiles. McCullough is testing the mannequin using various clothing to determine how humans can achieve maximum comfort in arctic conditions.

Jones said the project is being funded by the military.

Most funding coming from private companies and the military is used for projects dealing with extreme weather conditions, such as arctic

Food activist to talk about export myths

By The Collegian Staff

The co-founder of the Institute for Food and Development Policy will address the problem of "Food for a Starving Planet" during the All-University Convocation at 7:30 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

Francis Moore Lappe has given testimony before the U.S. Congress on agricultural export policy, addressed the U.N. World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development and worked as an adviser for CBS and ABC television.

Lappe is also the author of several books dealing with the question of why hunger exists in a world of plenty.

In identifying the status quo which Lappe said she hopes to change, she cites factors such as worldwide mismanagement of agricultural resources, inept and often corrupt administration of food assistance programs and the insensitivity of the West to the plight of the developing world.

In her testimony before the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Lappe discussed four lessons she has learned from studying the roots of hunger. These include not blaming nature for the tragedy of hunger; discovering that the most wasteful and inefficient food systems are those controlled by a few in the interests of a few which creates the illusion of scarcity; the idea that where food-producing resources are controlled by a few, a narrow production fixation will lead to more food and yet more hunger; and the funneling of foreign aid to governments unaccountable to the poor will further undermine the interests of the poor.

Brokaw defends on-location reporting

By TOM SCHULTES

Business/Government Editor During a pre-lecture press conference, "NBC Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw defended onlocation reporting and shuttle coverage, explained the administration's agricultural attitudes and defended his appearances on "Late Night with David Letterman." Brokaw said if his appearances on Letterman's show hurt his credibility after 25 years of journalism, "then I probably haven't done what I should have done." He said one of the problems is that the "priesthood of journalism" takes itself too seriously.

Brokaw made his comments during a press conference prior to his delivery of the 71st Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues.

Brokaw, in explaining the increasing number of on-location stories, said they can involve risks but the media must be flexible to respond to and possible problems in getting pictures - or himself - out of the country. Brokaw and other network correspondents left the country following the elections and were away when Ferdinand Marcos turned the

"(But) we have to be careful when we go (on location) to a story," he said. "We have to give it something extra."

Brokaw said being on location allows him to have a better sense of events by not being in an office.

"(In Nicaragua) I had a really first-hand understanding of what was happening, and it was useful" because he could see events at the polling places, he said.

Brokaw said the Reagan administration's policy toward agriculture is best described as "benign neglect."

He told reporters the administration is not unsympathetic to the farmer's plight, but its attitude is clearly stated, reflecting the goal for fewer subsidies and a smaller role of government in farming and small industry.

"It's a tragedy what is happening," Brokaw said, adding in many cases it is farmers who have been victimized, largely in part to erratic policies caused by a lack of vi-

"No one knew what to plan or what to expect," he said, which resulted in patchwork agricultural policies. When asked about the network's role in covering terrorism, Brokaw said we "have to be careful when covering the long siege.

"(We have to decide) is this something new? Something different and important?" in comparing follow-ups to the initial act, he said.

He questioned the need for coverage in the Beirut hostage story when the plane's co-pilot was taken to the hospital for an insect bite.

With the shuttle tragedy, Brokaw said he was pleased with his network's coverage.

He said the extensive time used was proper to answer the many questions and because television has a rotating audience, prompting continuous coverage.

"I don't think we overplayed it," Brokaw said.

A killdeer, one of 320 species of birds which have been identified by birdwatchers at Cheyenne Bottoms, searches for food along one of the five shallow pools that make up the marsh.

Cheyenne Bottoms: an arid marshland

A muskrat paddles to its lodge. A group of ducks bob for food, disturbing the stillness of the giant pool. A mallard bursts into flight. Perhaps spurred by spring fever, he flies like a jet over the quiet marsh and disappears into the gray sky.

Then Cheyenne Bottoms becomes quiet once again.

Cheyenne Bottoms is a 64-squaremile (41,000 acres) basin located about six miles northeast of Great Bend in Barton County. The Chevenne Bottoms Wildlife Management Area is a marsh occupying 12,300 acres along the low edge of the basin.

"Cheyenne Bottoms is principally a migratory marsh," said Stan Wood, area manager of Cheyenne Bottoms for the Kansas Fish and Game Commission. "It's a feeding and resting area for birds during their migration."

Wood said the Bottoms is important to the birds because it is critical they arrrive at their breeding or wintering grounds in good physiological condition.

"We've said for years Cheyenne Bottoms is probably the most important waterfowl area in the Central Flyway, but we don't have the hard data," Wood said. "Ducks, geese and shorebirds don't drop by and register when they show up.

The Central Flyway is a migratory path from the wintering grounds along the Gulf of Mexico to the breeding grounds in the Northwest Territories in Canada. The eastern border follows the eastern state lines of North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. The western border follows the Continental Divide.

Though the importance of the Bottoms is unknown, there is little doubt that wildlife is abundant there. In peak times, as many as 600,000 ducks, 40,000 geese and millions of shorebirds are seen in a single day. Birdwatchers have counted 320 species of birds at the Bottoms.

In fact, the only thing that is not abundant at Cheyenne Bottoms is water.

"I've seen a total drying up of the area in terms of an available, reliable water source," Wood said. "When I came here the water supply wasn't very good. It's diminished considerably since then.

"The Arkansas River has completely dried up and Wet Walnut Creek is an intermittent stream at best," he said. Cheyenne Bottoms has a legal water right to 30,000 acre-feet per year from the Arkansas River, 20,000 acre-feet per year from the Wet Walnut Creek and no limit on the acre-feet taken from Dry Walnut

In addition to the three regulated watersheds available to Cheyenne Bottoms, water is available from two unregulated streams - Blood Creek Bottoms. Wood said Save the Bottoms has succeeded in getting the general public interested in the problems and impact of Cheyenne Bottoms.

Garton said if Cheyenne Bottoms went back to natural conditions, it would be unable to provide a reliable habitat for wildlife.

diversion dams, where as much as 20,000 acre-feet of water was diverted to the marsh in previous years.

Wood said under natural conditions Cheyenne Bottoms has historically been wet one out of every three years.

In the early 1950s, the state began constructing a series of dikes and diversion dams which split the area into five pools. The Arkansas River and Wet Walnut Creek were to be permanent water sources available to keep water in the pools.

"Cheyenne Bottoms will always be here. We'll have wet years and dry years, but it will never be as bad as it was historically. We have three drainage areas to draw water from that weren't there before," Wood said. "Of course it's not going to be like it was in the late 1950s and early 1960s either.

Wood said he wasn't sure what the ecological impact would be if the Bottoms went back to natural condi-"Birds are quite adaptive. They can make adjustments," Wood said. "But whether there would be any place for them to go to and just how much they can adjust, we'd find out with time.' Garton and Wood both said the destruction of other wetland areas could make it tough on migratory birds.

"The next place north of Cheyenne Bottoms is the Platte River in Nebraska. The next place south is the Salt Plains National Wildlife refuge in Oklahoma. Either way, it's quite a distance from one place to the other," Wood said.

Like the ecological impact, the economic impact of Cheyenne Bottoms is difficult to assess, said O.W. Huss, president of the Great Bend Chamber of Commerce.

"I'm guessing as a bare minimum Cheyenne Bottoms has a million dollar impact on this area, and that's just hunters," Huss said. "We have birdwatchers and tourists that come out just to see the Bottoms. There is no way of telling really what the economic impact is.'

Wood said Cheyenne Bottoms is by far the premier tourist attraction in Central Kansas and is also one of the premier birding areas in the country.

Hispanic council to offer lecture series

By ANNETTE FANKHAUSER Collegian Reporter

The promotion of Hispanic culture, heritage and tradition is a primary goal of the Mexican American Council of Students, said Dolores Bernal, junior in business administration and president of the council.

MACS, formerly MEChA, changed names last semester to give students a better understanding of the council. Among other methods, the group plans to spread awareness through a lecture series.

Senate approves dog-, horse-racing bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on Monday endorsed a House-passed resolution legalizing pari-mutuel wagering on dog and horse racing in Kansas with only one dissenting vote.

Although the resolution is very similar to a pari-mutuel amendment adopted by the Senate last year, its fate is unclear because it is tied directly to a lottery resolution before the House.

The lower chamber will debate the lottery resolution Tuesday - the second time the issue has been before the House. On Feb. 19, it fell five votes shy of winning the 84 votes needed for two-thirds approval.

Basically, the measure would let voters decide whether to amend the Kansas Constitution to allow a staterun lottery to raise $35 million to fund

The pari-mutuel resolution would amend the same provision of the constitution, which currently bans gambling on anything other than bingo. It has already passed the Senate in a slightly different form.

However, Senate Majority Leader Bud Burke, R-Leawood, said the pari-mutuel resolution is in limbo until the House agrees to a lottery.

Sen. Edward Reilly Jr.,

R-Leavenworth, predicts the Senate eventually will adopt the resolution of the measure. Reilly, the committee chairman, cited supporters' arguments, which say taxes on parimutuel wagering would raise $5-6 million for a state with economic pro-

Reilly said the consensus among the leadership is that the lottery and pari-mutuel resolutions should "travel together or not at all."

Senate group agrees to keep special tax breaks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - In a vote portrayed by Chairman Bob Packwood as an unwarranted victory for the very rich, the Senate Finance Committee agreed Monday that municipal bonds now in the hands of investors should remain free of federal tax.

The committee, without taking a vote or considering any amendments, tentatively decided to retain all present-law special tax breaks for the oil and gas, timber, farming and mining industries. The House, in passing its version of tax overhaul last December, had increased taxes on those industries by about $8.8 billion over five years.

Several senators said they will offer amendments later affecting those tax provisions, which include the oil depletion allowance, immediate deductibility of timber-growing costs, and quick writeoff of fertilizer and land-clearing costs.

Action on the bonds provision, taken by voice vote without dissent, helped to quiet fears that had unsettled the market for municipal bonds, a term for any security issued by state and local governments. The committee will decide later whether to tax bonds issued in the future, but by a 19-0 vote the panel agreed that not even that change - if it is approved would take effect before 1987.

"We are not talking about taxing the poor ... not even the upper-middle incomes," Packwood said. "We are talking about taxing the rich - the very rich.'

His proposal would have applied only to a few hundred thousand people whose incomes and deductions are so high that they are subject to a "minimum tax."

Colleagues argued it would be unfair to impose a tax retroactively.

The bonds issue was the first to face the committee as it began work on a bill fashioned by Packwood that would produce the biggest changes in the federal income tax in more than

Afterwards, the panel began analyzing Packwood's provisions affecting the farm, timber, mining and oil and gas industries but made no decisions. There is a major problem: The tax plan passed by the House would cost those industries about $8.8 billion over five years; the Senate bill would cost them nothing.

On the bonds issue, Packwood, an Oregon Republican, cautioned that "if we exempt from taxation existing municipal bonds, then we are going to see stories of very wealthy people paying no tax." He noted estimates that 56 percent of all tax-free bonds held by individuals are owned by families whose incomes are at least $280,000 a year. "Do we want to put the federal government on a course of taxing state and local obligations?" asked Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn. "This is a lousy time to do that."

Springtime football rites begin Parrish style

Four survivors prepare to tackle title

Head football coach Stan Parrish gives his squad directions before running drills during the first day of spring workouts Monday on the football practice fields. The Wildcats' spring practices culminate with the first Alumni - Varsity football game April 26.

By TONY CARBAJO Sports Writer

Stan Parrish began his first-year climb toward improving the Wildcats gridiron fortunes with the official opening of spring practice

Parrish, the Wildcats first year football mentor, showed evidence of his unofficial 1986 theme, "WIN", by working his squad out in full pads and hitting like it was the middle of fall drills

The K-State team, which features 37 returning lettermen - 19 on offense, 16 on defense and 2 specialists ran through various drills with their specific coaches and the offensive unit worked on building the foundation for Parrish's multi-faceted passing attack.

Parrish's staff of nine assistant coaches had the squad running through drills to help improve team speed and hitting everything from other linemen to blocking sleds to tackling dummies. The mood of the players was very receptive after the 'rough" opening day workout.

"It was a lot rougher than I thought it would be," said Rick Lewis, a junior who missed all of last season rehabilitating an injured knee. "It's fun to be back out there. The mood of the other players is real good. Everybody is looking forward to the rougher practices, especially when we get to do some hitting."

Among the group of players Parrish greeted Monday were 35 redshirts and three injury hardship returnees. Thirty of the returning redshirts will be classified as freshmen next fall.

Parrish worked hard in the offseason to add team speed to his recruiting class, most notably to the areas of running back, quarterback, receiver and defensive back - or what is known to coaches as the skill positions. The skill positions are an area which may prove to be a weak spot for the team next fall.

A promising strength for next season will be the returning starters at the defensive ends. Kevin Humphrey, a second team All-Big Eight selection last year, teams with returnee Jeff Hurd to balance the ends of the defensive line.

But don't ask Parrish to single out names at this portion of spring drills. the first-year guide is not about to reel off any names yet.

"Don't ask me about individuals," Parrish said. "It will be a long Parrish, however, was more than willing to talk about team morale, an area he vowed to improve when he took over the program last December.

"We got a lot of things done," Parrish said. "It was like all practice ones. These kids want to work hard, they want to get it done (winning).

The squad continues its workouts until April 26 when the team takes on a group of former K-Staters in the first-ever alumni game. Slated to play opposite the current Wildcats are such former stars as Paul Coffman, Lynn Dickey and Steve Grogan

Spring sports offer fans different look

After a year filled with losing K-State sports, could it be that a couple of K-State athletic teams actually have the possibility of contending in the Big Eight?

After suffering through an entirely forgettable football season and a notso-memorable basketball season, K-State fans may have the opportunity to come out and see the Wildcats win in something for a change.

The spring sports season has arrived and with it some K-State teams that actually have a chance for upper-division placements in the Big Eight Conference.

Aside from cross country and women's volleyball - not big spectator sports by any means - no K-State team has finished in the Big Eight's upper division this year.

But spring has arrived. And already, Wildcat track and field and baseball teams are showing signs of

In indoor competition, the Wildcat women's track team finished second to Nebraska in the Big Eight meet and has a fair chance to unseat the Cornhuskers in the conference outdoor meet in mid May. Nebraska has won the Big Eight outdoor title for six consecutive years, but last year the Wildcat women came within 23 points of stealing the crown from the Cornhuskers, the closest any team has come since the streak began. K-State has returnees from a year ago - and good ones, too. Three outdoor all-Americans return for the women, including Rita Graves in the high jump, Michelle Maxey in the 400 meters and Anne Stadler in the 1,000 meters. Also returning is Big Eight indoor 3,000 meter champion Jacque Struckhoff, an indoor all-American this year.

Graves, Maxey and Struckhoff each have the potential to win their events at the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet, too.

Thanks to some surprising performances in last weekend's Paper Tiger Invitational at Baton Rouge, La., the men's team looks like a contender for the top three at the Big Eight meet as well.

And any time you mention the Wildcat men's team, the name Kenny Harrison is bound to come to mind. Harrison, probably the most talented athlete of any kind on campus, is the NCAA indoor long jump champion and also an excellent triple jumper. A five-time all-American and only a sophomore, Harrison is definitely worth coming out to watch. Coach Steve Miller has already tabbed Harrison a future Olympian. While the men's track and field team doesn't have the number of all-Americans that the women's team does, it does have good balance. This balance may add up to a second- or third-place finish in the Big Eight

The track teams have the KSU Invitational April 5 at R.V. Christian Track and travel to the Kansas Relays in Lawrence April 18 and 19.

And let's not leave out the baseball team, either. Granted, there have been some disappointments so far (the split of a double-header with Fort Hays State for example), but there have also been some bright spots. The team has victories over four ranked opponents and has played other good teams close. Coach Gary Vaught thinks he has the type of team that is capable of beating anyone in the Big Eight.

Powerhouse catcher Jeff Turtle, the national junior college leader in home runs last season, has emerged as a hitting star, and other players such as designated hitter Otto Kaifes (.424 batting average in 47 games last season) and outfielder Gary Pridey return to solidify the line-up.

Improvements have taken place at Frank Myers Field as well. New bleachers have been installed to increase the seating capacity to 2,000 fans. Lights have been installed. The Famous Chicken is even scheduled to make an appearance at the Wichita State game, April 24. Home Big Eight games with Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri and Iowa State are scheduled as well.

So, those K-State fans out there who thought spectator sports seasons were over might just have something to look forward to, after all.

And who knows? K-State might even pick up some victories. Men's tennis team falls to Golden Hurricanes

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State men's tennis team dropped an 8-1 decision to the Tulsa Golden Hurricanes Monday at the

L.P. Washburn tennis courts. The lone victory for the Wildcats came from No. 1 singles player Deon Botha, as he defeated Bob Boag, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4. "Seems like Deon has been going three sets against everyone," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Next action for the Wildcats will be at 9:00 a.m. today when K-State meets Bethel College in the first round of the KSU Invitational. In other first round action, Fort Hays State will play Kearney (Neb.) State. The winners and losers of the two matches will meet at 1:00 p.m.

team that will play Duke in the "It was like they wanted to win semifinals of the NCAA basketball more than we did," Manning said. the one that lost 92-86 to the Blue Devils in December, Danny Manning said Monday.

Brown agreed with Manning on the improvement of his 35-3 team, which won the Big Eight regular season and postseason titles and set a conference record for victories.

"I know as a coach I'm more comfortable with this team today than back in December," he said. "I want the kids to be proud of what they accomplished in getting to the Final Four. But I don't want them to be content. Not yet. We still have a goal of a national championship.

That's within our grasp. The Kansas-Duke game Saturday at Dallas will match the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country.

Manning, the Player-of-the-Year in the Big Eight Conference and hero of the 75-67 victory over North Carolina State in Sunday's Midwest Regional final, said the Jayhawks again will lose to the Atlantic Coast Conference champions - if they play with the same lack of intensity as in the earlier game.

The prelude to the NCAA semifinal game came early in December at New York in the final LAWRENCE - The Kansas of the NIT Big Apple tournament.

The thing I remember about that game is all the loose balls we didn't get and all the rebounds they got and we didn't get. They have a great team and they beat us.

Perhaps the sharpest, most painful memory of the loss to Duke belongs to senior forward Ron Kellogg.

"I remember the man I was guarding, David Henderson, scoring 30 points against us," he said. 'It's the most points anybody ever scored against me. He was making his first start of the year and I didn't have any idea of what to ex-Calvin Thompson, the senior guard who scored 26 points in the overtime victory against Michigan State in the Midwest semifinals. said it did not take long for the Jayhawks to stop celebrating being the first Big Eight team in 12 years to reach the Final Four.

"We took our showers after we beat North Carolina State Sunday," he said. "And then we started thinking about Duke. Getting to the Final Four was one of our goals this season. Just one.'

Press won't interfere with Cardinals' game

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - If there's one thing Coach Denny Crum has learned in five previous trips to the NCAA Final Four with Louisville, it's to protect his players from the

"My experience...is that it gets to be a zoo, more so for the players than me," Crum said Monday. "I can control who I see.

"Everywhere they walk on campus, everyone wants a piece of them. Everywhere they go, fans want to talk, to inflate their ego. I've been through it so much, I know how to handle it.'

Crum is most concerned about his younger players, including freshman center Pervis Ellison and sophomore forward Herbert Crook, whose performances have been a key to the seventh-ranked Cardinals' success in the tournament.

So, Crum has closed practices to the media and forbidden player interviews. He said Monday he might make his three senior starters forward Billy Thompson and guards Milt Wagner and Jeff Hall, each a member of the 1983 Final Four team — available for about 15 minutes one day this week.

"I think they can handle it, Crum said. "I'm not trying to punish anybody. I'm just trying to what I think is best.'

Louisville, 30-7 and the West Regional champion, will face Louisiana State, 26-11, the surprise winner of the Southeast Regional, Saturday at Dallas in the first semifinal game.

Crum, a former assistant at UCLA, guided his first Louisville team to a Final Four berth in 1972. The Cardinals also made it in 1975, 1980, 1982 and 1983, winning the title

After repeat performances though, Crum said he looks at a trip to the Final Four as just another day at the office.

"To me, it's still my job," he said. "It feels good to see that the team has progressed enough to make it this far, but I feel more of the pressure and other (intangibles) that others like fans

Crum said the only changes he will make after all that experience is his unpopular decision to shield his players from the media.

It will soon be seen whether or not Crum's experience has paid off and his decision leads his Cardinals to a national championship.

Duke is 'Cinderella' in Krzyzewski's eyes

By The Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. - In a season when more than one team has been not a problem. Since Duke ascendsearch for the NCAA basketball champion, Duke believes there has been more than one pumpkin.

"I think we're Cinderella," Mike Krzyzewski, coach of the topranked Blue Devils, said Monday. "The dance is just longer."

"If all those other teams are Cinderella, it must have struck midnight," senior forward David Henderson said.

Duke, 36-2, reached the NCAA Final Four with a 71-50 victory over Navy Sunday in the East Regional final at East Rutherford, N.J. The Blue Devils will meet secondranked Kansas Saturday at Dallas, and if they win, will face the winner of the Louisville-Louisiana State game for the championship.

This will be the Blue Devils' first trip to the Final Four since 1978 when they lost to Kentucky 98-94 in the final.

Krzyzewski said the trip won't be all business.

Confidence, Krzyzewski said, is called Cinderella in the ballyhooed ed to the No. 1 ranking Feb. 25, Krzyzewski said college basketball watchers have been waiting for the Blue Devils to stumble.

Krzyzewski said the Blue Devils will concentrate on what he believes has gotten them this far defense.

One pleasant surprise against Navy was Duke's rebounding. The Blue Devils outrebounded the Middies 49-29, surprising Robinson, the 6-foot-11 Navy center.

"Nobody has pounded us like that," Robinson said. "Every time I turned around they had a rebound."

"Rebounding does not come naturally to us," Krzyzewski said. "It's not going to come to us. We have to go after it. We have to concentrate on it - concentrate on areas of weakness. (But) if we outrebound our opponents by an average of 19 in the Final Four, I'll be happy.'

With a front line boasting the "I think you have to make sure talents of seven-footer Greg Dreiling and 6-foot-11 Danny Manning, Krzyzewski said. "If I'm wrong, I'll the smaller Blue Devils will face a pay the price for it. With a mature tall challenge if Duke intends to out

LSU remains fighter through frustrations

By The Associated Press BATON ROUGE, La. - With two players suffering from the chicken pox, the loss of its captain and scoring leader and three defeats in five days, there was no place for Louisiana State's basketball team to go but up, senior guard Derrick Taylor said Monday.

"We had to get down a little before we started to pull together," said Taylor, who combined with former reserves Don Redden and Ricky Blanton to bring the 11thseeded Tigers through four NCAA tournament upset victories en route to a Final Four matchup against seventh-ranked Louisville.

After losing 7-foot-1 freshman Tito Horford to Miami and 7-0 center Zoran Jovanovich to a knee injury, the Tigers wanted to build an offense around Nikita Wilson and John Williams.

Wilson, the team's captain and scoring leader, flunked out of school in late January - the same week Williams and another player were hospitalized with chicken pox.

The Tigers then went on to lose three games during a five-day period. The losses were to Kentucky, Georgia and Georgetown.

"The rest of us knew we had to pick up the slack," said Taylor, who scored 23 points in the Tigers' victory over Georgia Tech last Thursday.

"Whenever you're looking to score more, it gives you a more aggressive attitude," he said. "The rest of us started playing more aggressively." Coach Dale Brown knew his other players were not the scoring equal of Wilson and Williams, who continued to be plagued with tendinitis and a virus. So he began putting more emphasis on a "freak' defense.

The defense's constantly changing patterns helped beat thirdranked Kentucky 59-57 Saturday as the Tigers held All-American forward Kenny Walker to four points in the second half after he had scored 16 points in the first half.

Brown said he would rely on the same game plan against Louisville.

'Everybody is hungry now,' said Redden, who scored 15 points against Kentucky. "Once we get five players clicking at the same time, we should win the national championship."

LSU, 26-11, is making its first Final Four appearance since 1981, when the Tigers lost to Indiana in the opening game.

'Out of Africa' dominates Oscars

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - "Out of Africa" dominated the 58th Academy Awards on Monday by winning seven Oscars, including best picture and best direction by Sydney Pollack.

Top acting honors went to William Hurt, as the homosexual in "Kiss of the Spider Woman," and Geraldine Page, as the ailing widow in "The Trip to Bountiful."

Don Ameche won the best supporting actor award for "Cocoon" and Anjelica Huston won as best supporting actress for "Prizzi's Honor."

Lionel Richie's "Say You, Say Me" from "White Nights" won best song.

According to the sources, the missiles were detected early Monday morning Eastern Standard Time during the second day of maneuvers off the Libyan coast. The first flights by U.S. Navy jets over the gulf occurred late Sunday night without incident, the sources added. The Navy ships include the carriers Saratoga, Coral Sea and America and 27 other smaller combat vessels. The carriers have more

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore. 'Countless unmet challenges face the United States today: cancer, hunger and threat of nuclear war. Instead of confronting those challenges, we are engaging in childlike games of 'dare and double-dare' with a sick and dangerous clown."

House Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois, said after the briefing, "As far as I'm concerned, Libya engaged in an act of provocation that warranted our response."

Sen. Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kansas, also said he supported the action, calling it "appropriate." And

Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said, "It's important to show Khadafy those are international waters."

Dole's Republican colleague from Kansas, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, said Monday "the incident today was probably inevitable" because of Khadafy's repeated threats involving the gulf region. However, Kassebaum said, "that there is nothing illegal about a U.S. presence there.'

"The United States and all other nations have a clear legal right to operate in international waters. We now have been forced to defend that right and I believe we must continue to do so until Khadafy recognizes the same international laws obeyed by other nations," she said. "This is no time to carry a twig."

Sen. Strom Thurmond,. R-S.C., said, "The United States has acted responsibly in retaliating against acts of agression perpetrated by Col. Khadafy."

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., suggested that the administration may be in violation of the War Powers Act of 1973.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, expressed concern that the confrontation might spark Libyan attempts to carry out terrorist actions in the United States.

"My chief concern now ...is not whether we can hold our own there in the gulf, because certainly we've got much more power there than Khadafy does," he said.

"But my concern is what action might be taken on the terrorist front, given Khadafy's threat to carry terrorism to our shores. I want to find out all possible information we have about what possible steps he might take regarding terrorism.'

However, Leahy said the "FBI is probably in the best shape it's ever been in to counter terrorism here."

U.S. jets attack Libyan boats

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.S. jets and warships destroyed two Libyan patrol boats and damaged a radar missile site Tuesday, and the Pentagon declared the renewed American action a defense against "hostile intentions," even though no hostile fire provoked it.

For a second straight day, the Navy's 6th Fleet opened fire on Col. Moammar Khadafy's forces in the dispute over Libya's claim to sovereignty over the Gulf of Sidra.

At first, on Tuesday morning, the Pentagon's chief spokesman said the renewed attacks came in retaliation against Libyan missile attacks aimed unsuccessfully at U.S. planes. Later, the administration said there had been no new fire from the Li-

One of the patrol boats was sunk by the cruiser Yorktown, marking the first time a Navy ship had used its surface-to-surface missiles against a Libyan vessel.

Libyans claim Gulf of Sidra

U.S. officials said the attacks, which occurred during the pre-dawn hours Tuesday, Tripoli time - or late Monday night Eastern Standard Time - were justified to protect American sailors and ships from attack by a country that had already demonstrated "hostile intentions."

The attacks came even though the Libyan boats and missile installation did not fire on American forces. But U.S. officials said the battle force had standing orders that declared any Libyan plane or boat approaching them to have hostile inten-

"We have been given ample evidence of hostile Libyan intentions...and we will defend ourselves," declared Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims, referring to Libya's launch of ground-to-air missiles against U.S. planes on Mon-

There were conflicting reports, meantime, as to whether the United States might end its maneuvers below Libya's so-called "line of death" before the scheduled deadline of April 1.

Secretary of State George Shultz said the Mediterranean exercise, which began Saturday night, would continue as planned. But Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Sims both suggested that the commander of the 6th Fleet, Vice Adm. Frank Kelso, could decide to end the exercise before April 1.

The United States has three aircraft carriers and 27 other combat ships operating in the region. Three surface ships remained inside the gulf, but the carriers remained outside it to the north.

In other developments:

-Pentagon sources said the U.S. armada was being closely shadowed by six Soviet combat ships and that the flagship of the Soviet flotilla remained in port in Tripoli, passing along intelligence information. Sims would not provide a precise count on the Soviet ships, although he indicated at least four were near the American vessels.

-Libyan air forces remained absent from the combat arena. Weinberger said Libyan fighters had been detected in the air, but all had remained over land and had made no move toward the gulf.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes and Sims said there was another "event" on Tuesday involving a Libyan patrol ship, but no further details were immediately forthcoming. Speakes said there was a possibility the boat managed to slip

-State Department spokesman Michael Austrian said that perhaps "a couple hundred" Americans remain in Libya following a U.S. order to leave by Feb. 1 and, "We hold Libya responsible for their safety.'

Honduran officials request military aid

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras -A presidential spokesman said Tuesday the government has asked the United States for emergency military aid because 1,500 heavily armed Nicaraguan soldiers are in southern Honduras attacking Contra rebels.

"The situation is serious," said the spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity for security reasons. "There are foreign troops on our territory." There was no other official statement.

The spokesman said the Nicaraguan soldiers attacked U.S.-backed anti-Sandinista Contras and were on Capire mountain near the main rebel camp at Las

The spokesman said the decision to ask for aid came after an urgent Monday night meeting of the national security council convened by President Jose Azcona Hoyo.

The White House said President Reagan will approve $20 million in emergency assistance for the Honduran military today.

Meanwhile, Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government denied the reports from Tecucigalpa and Washington that its troops crossed into Honduras.

"It is one more lie by the Reagan administration in its campaign against Nicaragua," Manuel Espinoza, spokesman for Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, said in a telephone inter-

Voters to decide state-run lottery issue

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Without a single vote to spare, the Kansas House approved a Senate-passed measure Tuesday that would allow voters to decide whether to create a state-run lottery. However, key senators said late

Tuesday afternoon that House changes in the proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution would present significant obstacles which must be ironed out before the issue is placed on the November ballot. The final vote in the House was 84-41, giving it exactly the two-thirds legislative majority required to put constitutional amendments to a vote of the people.

The resolution had failed by five votes to achieve the two-thirds approval on Feb. 19, but was resurrected the next day and restored to the House calendar. Six lawmakers who voted against the proposal earlier reversed their positions Tuesday while one legislator broke a public pledge to support the measure and voted against it.

"I think more than anything else, people want to vote on the lottery and that was the deciding factor," House Speaker Mike Hayden said after the House approved the measure.

Because one amendment was added to the resolution when the House first debated it and two more changes were approved Tuesday, the resolution must return to the Senate for consideration. The upper chamber, which adopted the resolution last year, voted Tuesday afternoon not to go along with the changes, sending the matter to a conference committee.

The House amendments to the proposal would:

Prohibit advertising or other promotion of the lottery. Rep. Harold Guldner, R-Syracuse, said last month he would support the lottery if the change were added to the measure but he voted against the lottery anyway on Tuesday.

Require the odds of winning the lottery be printed on all Kansas lottery tickets. That change, which failed on a 60-60 tie last month, was approved 93-15 after Rep. J.C. Long, R-Harper, said he would vote for the proposal with the change.

- End lottery operations on July 1, 1990, unless continuation of the game receives endorsement from twothirds of the members in both houses of the Legislature that year. Long also promoted the so-called "sunset" amendment, which was approved 75-38, but did not base his support for the entire measure on that issue.

face of the desires of our constituents," said Senate Majority Leader Bud Burke, R-Leawood, one of three senators named to the negotiating panel. "I don't know why they put it on there other than to gain a vote or two.'

Another member of the conference committee, Sen. Ed Reilly. R-Leavenworth, agreed that the expiration date would present pro-

"I think that would be the thing that would draw the most fire," Reilly said.

Both senators said the odds provision would not pose a significant stumbling block but Burke called the advertising prohibition "ridiculous."

The resolution does not require Gov. John Carlin's signature, although he is a strong lottery supporter. Reps. George Teagarden of La Cygne, Homer Jarchow of Wichita and Larry Erne of Coffeyville, all Democrats, broke a 50-minute deadlock and put the resolution over the top by changing their votes against the resolution to yes.

Passage of the lottery in the House lifted a cloud of uncertainty from a resolution now before the Senate which would legalize pari-mutuel

"The sunset seems to fly in the wagering in Kansas on horse and dog racing.

The Senate had delayed acting on a pari-mutuel resolution adopted by the House until it saw the outcome of the lottery amendment in the House. Senate leadership has said the two proposals must "walk together or not at all."

Senate President Robert V. Talkington of Iola said last week the upper chamber would debate the parimutuel resolution Wednesday.

After being stuck on a 79-45 count for about 45 minutes, Rep. Bill Wisdom, D-Kansas City, switched his vote, giving supporters 80 votes. Whiteman, Donna D-Hutchinson, then cast her vote in favor, moving the total to 81-44.

At that point, Teagarden changed his vote, moving the lottery proposal within two votes of clearing the House at 82-43.

"There are 43 people who have determined the people of Kansas cannot vote on this issue," said Rep. Alfred Ramirez, R-Bonner Springs, in chastizing the opponents. "Actually, just two people are stopping the people from voting.'

Little more time elapsed before Jarchow changed his mind and Erne switched, giving the lottery resolution 84 votes and ending the drama.

Weinberger releases Soviet military study

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Soviet Union's modernization of its weapons arsenal is continuing at such a pace that it is "challenging the technological edge" on which U.S. security depends, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said Tuesday.

"Soviet modernization has not abated," Weinberger said in releasing the Pentagon's latest annual assessment of Soviet military power.

"Based on current trends, our projections for the '90s give us no reason to feel that we can rest in our effort to prevent the Soviets exploitable military advantage," he said. "They have more weapons of higher quality and higher capability," Weinberger said.

He released the study, titled 'Soviet Military Power 1986,' during a press conference Tuesday beamed around the world by the U.S. Information Agency.

"It's not necessary for us to match the Soviet forces in each category because we rely on our technological leadership to provide systems that are sufficiently superior so as to offset (their) numerical advantages," Weinberger said.

"But their military has moved increasingly into an era of high technology, and they're challenging the technological edge on which our security depends," he

The study included previously unreleased pictures of an intermediate-range SS-20 missile onits launcher; the newest version of the Delta missile subfrom achieving a very significant, marine, now said to be on sea trials, and the SU-27 fighter, a look-alike of the U.S. F-15 that the Pentagon says became opera-

Soviets condemn U.S. aggression

MOSCOW - A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Tuesday the Soviet Union "resolutely condemns" U.S. military actions against Libya.

Vladimir Lomeiko, head of the ministry's press department, said at a news conference that the American military exercises off Libya's coast were designed to provoke Libya.

His comments came on the second day of clashes between United States and Libyan forces in the disputed Gulf of Sidra. On Monday and Tuesday, Libya fired missiles at U.S. warplanes over the gulf, and the United States retaliated against Libyan patrol boats and installation on shore.

"It is clear that we are dealing here with an attempt to make legitimate their (U.S.) attempts to interfere anywhere in the world," Lomeiko said of the United States. "We consider that all peace-loving nations have a duty to take steps to support the sovereign Libyan state," he said. He did not elaborate.

"The Soviet people and the Soviet state resolutely condemn" the U.S. actions, Lomeiko added.

Women to hide during Holi Day

NEW DELHI, India - Today is Holi Day in India, a time to splash friends with colored powder and exchange sweets, but rowdies have made it an unholy holiday during which women hide in their homes.

The city administration is urging residents to "celebrate Holi in a holy way," but to little avail. Policemen are posted at strategic points and plainclothes officers ride buses to catch young men armed with dye-filled balloons and water pistols.

According to Hindu mythology, holi marks the burning of an evil woman named Holika, who wanted to kill her nephew for not worshiping her brother, the king. Traditionally, people rub and splash each other with color, exchange sweets and drink an intoxicant called bhang. In the past few years, however, Holi celebrations have passed the bounds of ordinary merrymaking. The Festival of Color has become a license to pinch and paw women and sing lewd songs. "This is Holi! This is Holi! Everything goes on Holi!" young hooligans shout.

U.S. government allots job funds

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The federal government has allocated more than $30 million to provide summer employment and training for economically disadvantaged youths in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

"Teens without skills or experience cannot get a foothold on the first rung of the employment ladder," said Richard G. Miskimins, regional administrator for the Labor Department's Employment and Training Administration.

"We want to give them the opportunity to learn valuable skills to compete in the job market," Miskimins said.

The funding announced this week coupled with an earlier announcement of funding on a formula basis will provide Iowa with more than $8 million, Nebraska with $3.2 million, Missouri with $15.4 million and Kansas with nearly $5 million.

Court OKs religious clothing ban

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court Tuesday gave the armed services sweeping authority to prohibit the wearing of religious garments by military personnel, ruling against an Air Force psychologist who wore a Jewish yarmulke while on duty.

By a 5-4 vote, the court said the Air Force properly banned a former captain who is an Orthodox Jewish rabbi from wearing a yarmulke, the traditional Jewish skull cap.

The court said the ban did not violate the constitutional rights of the former captain.

In other action, the court backed out of deciding whether public high schools may allow students to meet during school hours for prayer and religious worship.

The court said the Air Force did not violate the rights of S. Simcha Goldman, who was a clinical psychologist at March Air Force Base in Riverside, Calif., until 1981. Goldman is now on inactive reserve with the Air Force.

Goldman was a Navy chaplain from 1970 to 1972 and was assigned to March Air Force Hospital in 1977 after he received a doctorate degree in clinical psychology.

He wore a yarmulke in the hospital without incident until early

Crews to re-examine space shuttles

SPACE CENTER, Houston - The new shuttle boss promised NASA workers Tuesday that every element of the spaceship will be reexamined and, if necessary, redesigned before it flies again, and said when launches do resume the emphasis will be on "conservative flying."

In addition, Richard H. Truly, a former astronaut and NASA's associate administrator for space flight, said in a speech that he will direct a reassessment of NASA's management, and a redesign by "this nation's best talent" of the rocket booster suspected of causing the destruction of the shuttle Challenger.

Space shuttle flights have been suspended since Challenger exploded on Jan. 28, killing its seven-member crew.

Truly said he could offer no date when flights will resume, or say how many flights would be planned initially.

But he said "the safest, best way to get started again" would be with a daylight launch of an all-astronaut crew and a payload of the type that has flown befoe. Landing, he said, would be at Edwards Air Force Base in California, considered the safest runway for the shut-

Even with this plan, Truly said, spaceflight always will be a "bold" venture with dangers.

"We cannot print enough money to make it totally risk-free," he said. "But we will correct any mistakes we have made in the past."

Brothers produce film to depict lust, murder

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

Of all the movies released last year, the one I enjoyed the most was Joel and Ethan Coen's "Blood Simple" - an independently produced film with a budget of just over a million dollars (chickenfeed by Hollywood standards). This team of brothers, ages 30 and 28 respectively, have turned out the best thriller to hit the screen since "Psycho." It's a hypnotic film, filled with lust, greed and murder.

"Blood Simple" is like a joint nightmare that the entire theater audience experiences. And never does the movie let up from beginning to end. Its attack is relentless. But in the world of "Blood Simple," there is no escape for anyone. As we're told in the film's opening: "You're on your own.'

The material itself has been wellworked in film noirs of the '40s, "The Postman Always Rings Twice" and "Double Indemnity" (both based on the sex-laced murder novels of James M. Cain). Other filmmakers in recent years have tried mining this same terrain, most notably Lawrence Kasdan in "Body Heat," but that film was all too selfconscious. It was fun, yes, but all too premeditated.

The Coen brothers are never satisfied with simply recreating film noir images in "Blood Simple." They've worked up their own flamboyant style. In a sense they've updated the film noir for the '80s and made it relevant again.

The vision is fatalistic, but it's also playful. The Coens pay close attention to small, off-beat details - a drop of water on a sink drain, a bartender's feet as he jumps on top of the bar — and the details make the film come to life. The Coens don't focus on these details indiscriminately; they choose carefully from what's before them. This makes the familiar material fresh again.

Abby (Frances McDormand) is a good-looking young woman who has an affair with one of her husband's employees, Ray (John Getz). Her husband, Marty, runs a sleezy roadside bar. He's afraid his wife has been fooling around, so he hires a private detective to follow her.

M. Emmet Walsh plays the detective, an overweight man with a love for the perverse. His Texan drawl is so gritty it's practically obscene. He watches as Marty looks through a packet of snapshots he took of Abby and Ray in bed together.

"Why'd you take these?" says Marty. "I knew they was there."

"Let's just call it a fringe benefit," the detective says as the corners of his smile nearly wrap around his

Dan Hedaya as Marty is almost as creepy. He's the kind of husband who buys his wife a pearl-handled revolver as an anniversary present. Once finding out his wife is indeed unfaithful, he's consumed by jealousy. He hires the detective to kill off both Abby and Ray, but the detective doesn't quite follow orders.

As the movie moves along the suspense slowly builds and builds. By the movie's end the tension becomes almost unbearable, but it's a fun kind of tension. Under the hands of different filmmakers, the film might have become just as sordid as the characters themselves, but the Coen brothers employ a slightly demented tongue-in-cheek

This is the film's strongest point its saavy use of black comedy. And poor Marty, a Yankee misplaced in the South, is the butt of practically every joke.

With it's savage wit and brilliant camera work, "Blood Simple" emerges as the finest thriller to hit the screen in ages. That's all the more remarkable considering it's the first film by Joel and Ethan Coen.

'Hands of few' retain land, food activist says

By The Collegian Staff

The family farmer in the United States should not be replaced by absentee ownership or corporate farming with a large amount of land in the hands of a few, Frances Moore Lappe said at a press conference Tuesday afternoon.

Lappe is co-founder of the San Francisco-based Institute for Food and Development Policy.

"What I'm observing in American agriculture is precisely developed countries - the displacement of people from the land and the replacement by those who don't have a stake in long-term productivity," she said.

"This separation of people from the land and the absenteeism of ownership is what we see at the root of misery in the Third World. You see the farms of wealth and size while the family farm goes out of business," she said.

The citizens of Nebraska have what's taking place in lower- amended their constitution to say a farmer must own the land to avoid corporate ownership. Lappe said this was a "value-based choice."

> The United States needs to realize what it is doing by allowing family farms to go into the hands of a few, she said.

'We have a lot of identification with the family farm system. It's one of the best things," she said. "Our government has spent millions in other countries to get away from concentration of owner-

The U.S. government has come to cling to a "rigid dogma" such as when farmers were told to export to expand their markets. This dogma has been placed above basic values, she said.

The growth in exportation has created a market where those who have greater access to wealth can use that market to their advantage. Therefore the United States cannot have a "free market," Lappe said.

Student president to confront concerns

By The Collegian Staff

Opening permanent channels of communication between student government officials and students within the next few weeks is the top priority of the new administration, Student Body President Steven Johnson said Tuesday.

Johnson said personal visits by himself and his staff to living groups and at meetings of organizations are important opportunities to become familiar with student concerns.

"With the students there are not many set meetings, but I intend to visit the various organized living groups and gather input," said Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, during an interview. "We will be distributing a questionnaire to find out what students are think-

The questionnaire includes four questions which address concerns about handicapped accessibility, new-student orientation programs, proposals to institute an athletic fee, and proposals to alter the college ambassador system.

Johnson said the questionnaire is not the only method of bringing issues to the attention of student government officials. Students must "make communication a two-way street," he said.

Contact with students during the initial stages of the current Student Senate term is necessary if concerns are going to be identified and proposals or recommendations forwarded to faculty and administrators in a timely fashion, he said.

Developing confidence among his constituents and the people he reports to will be a key to the success

"It is important that I prove myself (to the University community) so they know I have been working to stay on top of what students want," Johnson said.

Communicating the positive elements of the University to potential students would have an impact on student recruitment. Development of an orientation program informing students about the in-tracacies of registration and dropadd would aid retention, he said.

The Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues drew television news anchorman Tom Brokaw to campus on Monday and Vice President George Bush to campus last semester. These are the kind of quality academic programs which are facets of the University and must be communicated to Kansans,

Khadafy's foolishness led to military clash political leaders, the U.S. Navy responded Monday to Libyan attacks on U.S. aircraft above the Gulf of Sidra by attacking Libyan military targets.

The U.S. action came after anti-aircraft missiles were fired at Navy warplanes that took off from aircraft carriers in the gulf and crossed Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy's "line of death." The controversial leader says anything south of 32 degrees, 30 minutes north latitude is inland water, and those who cross it must have his blessing.

The legality of the U.S. response is not in question. U.S. ships were sailing in what almost everyone except Khadafy agrees are international waters and Libya initiated the exchange.

Most countries regard territorial waters as extending 12 miles from shore. Not even

With the approval of both Libya's most powerful ally, the Republican and Democratic Soviet Union, honors the "line of death."

> However, U.S. forces had a clear chance to avoid conflict by retreating. The intent of the "freedom-of-navigation exercise" was to push Khadafy to carry out his threat to make the Mediterranean a "sea of fire."

Testing knowledge of pop culture

After reading yet another survey that points out how little students know about life, t is time to turn the tables and find out how knowledgeable older Americans are about current pop culture.

These studies have proven our ignorance in geography, history, trivia and most recently agriculture. Therefore I have created a test for everyone to take home to mom and dad to see just how knowledgeable they are about our culture.

No. 1: "The Boss" refers to: a) George Bush; b) Bruce Springsteen; c) God; d) Duane Acker. No. 2: "Hulk Hogan" is: a) a type of breakfast cereal; b) a professional wrestler;

c) a garbage truck; d) a nuclear missile. No. 3: "MTV" refers to: a) Mothers Terrified of Vampires; b) another new movie rating; c) Music Television; d) mass times

No.4: "Stupid Pet Tricks" are shown on: a) MTV; b) The Wild Kingdom; c) The Tonight Show; d) Late Night with David Let-

No. 5: "Tying one on" refers to: a) shoelaces; b) docking a boat; c) getting drunk; d) getting married. No.6: "Jazzercise" refers to: a) drug use; WAYNE LONG Collegian Columnist

b) a rock 'n' roll band; c) exercising to music; d) a video game.

No.7: "The Refrigerator" refers to: a) a major appliance; b) an ice hockey player; c) a football player; d) a '51 Studebaker.

No. 8: "Scoping out the chicks" refers to: a) a morbid game played with chickens; b) a soap opera; c) a drinking game; d) looking

No. 9: "Transformers" are: a) students who change majors; b) aliens; c) a rock 'n' roll band; d) toys.

No. 10: Amadeus refers to: a) a religion; b) a major at K-State; c) Spanish for "goodbye"; d) Mozart's second name.

Before reading the answers, remember that anyone from 15 to 25 years old should have a perfect or near-perfect score. If elderly readers are apathetic about these questions, you know exactly how most students feel about history, geography and agriculture.

It simply isn't information that everyone needs to know. Score each correct answer as 10 points and see which category you fit in.

A poor score (0-30) means you haven't talked to your son or daughter for many years, and if you don't want to get a rude awakening, I wouldn't recommend it.

An average score (40-60) means you like to meddle in the affairs of young adults, but don't understand much of what you come in contact with.

A high score (70-90) means you have a good idea of pop culture and probably call your son or daughter twice a week to have them explain things to you.

A perfect score means you either cheated or frequently go to rock concerts and Aggieville.

If this test seems stupid it is because it seems stupid to test students to find out what he or she doesn't know when time, effort and money should be spent on making them expand understanding of what they do know.

Correct answers: 1)b; 2)b; 3)c; 4)d; 5)c; 6)c; 7)c; 8)d; 9)d; 16)d.

Easter a time to ponder new birth

Easter is the ideal time of year to sit back and reflect on life. Many of our traditional Easter symbols emphasize the importance of life and its relationship to spring.

Eggs are traditional symbols of life and creation. Brightly colored eggs not only mark the festive celebrations of Christ's resurrection but also symbolize the bright colors of a returning spring. The rabbit and the lamb, two symbols of fertility, link the ideas of new birth, both in the Christian sense and the natural sense, and springtime.

With Easter we say "goodbye" to the cold, unfriendly season of winter and say "hello" to a new spring and a new life that we can appreciate. But do we really appreciate what we have?

I fear that Americans are in too much of a hurry to appreciate anything that happens outside the realm of business. By business, I mean jobs, homes, the economy, state and national politics, foreign policy - everything that directly pertains to this progressive, capitalistic society in which we live.

Every morning Americans gulp down a cup of coffee, snatch a donut and race for the office. At the dinner bell everyone dashes to the lunch counter for a pre-packaged sandwich and a cup of instant coffee, then runs at breakneck speed back to the office. When their tour of duty has ended, they hop in their souped-up sports cars and race home to TV

You say there'll never be a two-minute mile? I say go observe your companeros in the Union during a 10-minute break between

Life in these United States is a constant scramble because we feel we can't let one minute go by without doing something "constructive." something at which we can make a profit.

I'm not saying that working hard for a handful of greenbacks is bad. In fact, I wish my wallet grew more of that foliage.

What's wrong is when we run around like chickens with our heads cut off. We try to get somewhere in life by doing everything, but we don't take time to catch our breath. Consequently, some of the brightest moments pass us by.

You say you appreciate life and all its subtleties?

When did you last take time out of your hectic schedule to sit outside on a grassy lawn and watch the college folk walk by? When did you last walk through a garden and admire nature's skill with a paintbrush - the bluish-purple of the African violets, the transparent yellow and gold of the iris?

When was the last time you watched a sunset - when you saw a golden ball slowly descend from the sky and draw its blanket of darkness behind it, when you watched yellow, orange and red rays climb from the horizon toward the sky and join with the clouds before journeying west?

Living doesn't mean driving a new Thunderbird or owning a condominium. Living means experiencing life to its fullest. And the only way to accomplish that is to stop and notice nature's handiwork.

Easter is the perfect time to contemplate these things because it's the time of renewing relationships with friends and family and celebrating the rebirth of a new world bathed in the warmth and sunlight of spring.

When you go home this weekend, think about the wonderous power and beauty of nature. Take the time to watch a sunrise or a sunset and experience the true meaning of

Moratorium on farm foreclosure simplistic

For the second time in this cen- probably spell disaster for tury, our federal government is considering action that would halt loan foreclosures on farmland. The last time the federal government took such action was in the 1930s, when it responded to an agriculture crisis similar to the current one.

But a moratorium on farm foreclosures, which did keep some farmers on the land in the '30s, will have a negative impact on agriculture if approved now.

If a foreclosure moratorium is approved this year it would not help farmers who have already been declared in default of their loans. A moratorium passed two or three years ago could have been of great benefit to many farmers who have lost their land.

In addition, if lending institutions perceive that the federal government is in favor of the resolution, there could be a rush of foreclosure filings before the law takes effect. Therefore, a moratorium resolution would farmers who are dangerously close to default.

When credit institutions are forbidden to collect the only collateral farmers have to offer land, they see farmers as a bad credit risk and consequently cut off credit to farmers who are continuing their operations. This may drive working farmers to sell their land under duress because they are unable to get operating-expense loans.

Also, empirical evidence shows that foreclosure moratoriums raise interest rates of consumer loans, thus passing the cost of agricultural loans to the public.

If Congress passes a farmland foreclosure moratorium without balancing legislation to offset its effects, the federal government could find itself with economic problems reminicent of the Roosevelt era.

An attractive web

Editor,

Scientist or politician, we tend to think in terms of simile, metaphor and analogy. I heard a good one the other day. It seems there are two ways to explain how we think of foreign policy or international relations. One is a game of billiards, the other, a spider's web. A case in point is President Reagan's vision of the relationship between the United States and Central America.

The president seems to view this relationship as a game of billiards. His object is to apply strategic force to a cue ball, driving the colored balls out of sight into the side pockets. On the pool table, everything real is reduced to an abstraction. Human elements are conspicuously missing; the game is clean, bloodless, without suffering. Instead, attention is fixed on a dramatic confrontation of East and West supermen who wield what seem to be the only cue sticks.

In other times, other places, the president rightly views international relations as a complex room filled with spider webs. This is an interactive game with spiders and webs large and small, each with its own problems and attractions. His object is to maneuver carefully around the webs while spinning an intricate, compelling net of his own.

No matter how carefully he or other leaders proceed, they cannot escape (nor should they) being partially bound in these artful webs of circumstance and reciprocity. Such is the nature of global interdependence.

When we deal with the relatively weak and insightful, why is it that our foreign policy seems more like a billiard game than a room filled with spider webs? Wouldn't it be better to encourage the weaving of webs which draw and bind us in the stability of mutual circumstance? To rely on diplomacy rather than ultimatum? To create security through give and take instead of relying on military might to justify our greed and pigheadedness?

If we feel threatened by the Nicaraguan model and wish to demonstrate its depravity and weakness, why not weave an attractive web around that tiny country, a positive demonstration of political stability, economic prosperity and human rights in neighboring El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica?

To create this sphere of co-prosperity and stability, we must view Central Americans as partners rather than chattel managed by heavy-handed dictators. Let the president cease this talk of giving $100 million in military aid to the contras. Let him propose instead a mini-Marshall plan for the nations of Central America. In the long run, it's the only way to halt our slippery slide toward a bloody, inconclusive quagmire similar to what we knew in Vietnam. Cheaper too. Like they say, you can catch more flies with sugar than you can with vinegar.

Artwork offensive

Writing as one who has a high regard for womanhood, I wish to comment on the socalled art that is being displayed on the walls of the gallery in the Union.

Words cannot express my contempt for such a display, both large and small, of nudity. It is in extremely poor taste and should be removed from the gallery.

I talked to one young woman whose name I did not ask (and I am sure there are many others) who said it is an offense and embar-

Legislation may deny city more than $500,000 in funding

By JUDY GOLDBERG Collegian Reporter

As a result of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction legislation, Manhattan may lose more than $500,000 next year, said Curt Wood, city finance director.

Wood said this is because President Reagan is not going to renew the revenue-sharing program in 1987, in an effort to stay within Gramm-Rudman guidelines.

In the early '70s, President Richard Nixon started the program as a part of his New Federalism policies. Revenue-sharing programs provide funds to cities for a variety of public construction and social programs. One of the restrictions is that projects must include handicapped

"It's one of the few programs that has very few strings attached," he said. "We can spend it on virtually anything we want to."

Wood said Manhattan will lose revenue-sharing funds this year along with other cities.

He said including interest and last year's carryover, the city was supposed to receive $624,000 this year. Because of a 5 percent reduction for the second and third quarters of this year, and the elimination of the last quarter payment, Manhattan will lose about $100,000.

Therefore, he said, when Reagan eliminated the revenue-sharing program for 1987, it deleted funding for the last quarter of Manhattan's 1986 fiscal year.

Programs budgeted for 1986 will not be affected by the loss though, he

"This year we'll be OK," he said. "We're going to borrow some of that money from a surplus in the general fund to budget these programs."

Wood said 19 social-service programs receive money from revenue

This year $252,000 was budgeted for social-service programs.

He said social services are the most important items funded by the revenue-sharing program. Wood said the city commission has adopted a resolution to give $150,000 to the services next year through a property tax levy.

The tax levy will be increased 11/3 mills, which means the average person with a $50,000 house will pay $7.50 more a year, he said.

"The commission thinks it would not be acceptable to raise (property taxes) more than that to the general taxpayer," he said.

Wood said the $150,000 for socialservice programs is only about 30 percent of the year's revenuesharing budget.

He said $275,000 was allocated for capital-improvement projects this

"In '87 we're going to do a lot less than in the past," he said. "There's a limit to raising taxes." Wood said bills have been introduced in Congress which would allocate funding for cities with low-income neighborhoods.

Revenue sharing will not be included in the city's 1987 budget, but it will be amended if money is allocated as a result of the bill, he said.

Tobacco chewers face cancer risk; dangers still unclear, director says

From Staff and Wire Reports

The extent of the damage from using smokeless tobacco is still unknown, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, Tuesday about a Washington report detailing the dangers of using smokeless tobacco.

Longtime snuff users may face a 50 times greater risk of cancer of the cheek and gum than non-users. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said in a report condemning both snuff and chewing tobacco as addictive cancer risks.

Tout said the research done on the effects of smokeless tobacco is new and it seems the product is medically dangerous.

"Smokeless tobacco has a more rapid carcinogenic (cancer-causing) effect," he said. "It is an irritant in constant contact with the mucus membrane."

He said with spring baseball starting "you could walk out on the practice field and nearly every coach and most ballplayers have a lip full."

Koop's report was prepared by a 12-member advisory committee based on studies by about 75 scientists and medical experts. It amounts to formal declaration by the government that snuff and chewing tobacco, which are rapidly growing in popularity among young people, must be placed in the same category as cigarettes as a public health

"The committee concludes that the oral use of smokeless tobacco represents a significant health risk," the surgeon general's report said. "It is not a safe substitute for smoking cigarettes. It can cause cancer and a number of non-cancerous oral conditions and can lead to nicotine addiction and dependence.'

A draft copy of the report was being released on Capitol Hill Tuesday by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The same conclusions have been reached by others, and Koop has informally condemned both snuff and chewing tobacco before. The new report, however, formally adopts the findings as the position of the surgeon general and the Public Health Service.

"Almost 30 years after the Public Health Service's first statement on the health effects of cigarette smoking, it is now possible to issue the first comprehensive, in-depth review of the relationship between smokeless tobacco use and health," Koop said in a foreward to the report.

The surgeon general said scientific evidence is strongest against snuff, with studies suggesting users will get mouth cancers "several times more frequently...compared to nontobacco users.'

Kansas official urges panel to raise driver's license fees

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A House committee was urged Tuesday to increase driver's license fees to provide more money for drug and alcohol abuse prevention programs in the state's school districts.

Revenue Secretary Harley T. Duncan asked the House Transportation Committee to endorse a bill that would increase by $4 the fee for a regular operator's license required to drive an automobile, saying it would prevent a drain on the state highway fund.

Under the Senate-approved bill, an operator's license to drive an automobile would increase from $6 to $10. Truck and bus driver's licenses would rise from $10 to $15, and motorcycle permits would increase from $3 to $5. Beginners' permits would go from 50 cents to Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology, came to K-State after heading the home economics departments at Auburn University and Michigan State University.

Dean notes growth potential in human ecology programs

By The Collegian Staff

articles about University deans. Tomorrow the series will feature James Coffman, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.)

It was a difficult decision for Barbara Stowe to accept the position of dean of the College of Human Ecology, but she said she hopes her decision will benefit not only herself but also the college.

The most difficult aspect of accepting the position was knowing she would have to leave her husband, Howard, professor of pre-veterinary medicine at Michigan State University in East Lansing, Mich., and only be able to see him about every four weeks.

"Actually I was sought after - I didn't really apply for this position but after I submitted my credentials I was accepted," Stowe said. "I was acquainted with this college and with the faculty and had admiration for them, and I knew there was potential for the college and I was interested in accepting the administrational challenge.

Before coming to the University, Stowe was the head of the home economics departments for Michigan State and Auburn University in Alabama. While in Michigan, Stowe was also in charge of the 4-H Youth Extension Program for the

One of the first things some people wanted Stowe to do was to change the name of the College of Home Economics to the College of Human Ecology, but it was a little more difficult than simply changing the sign on the building.

"A land-grant university belongs to a lot of people, the alumni, students and so on, but I first wanted to meet with other administrators and patrons of the college and convince them that a name change could only help the University," Stowe said.

After meeting with about 20 deans from around the state, it was decided that the College of Human Ecology was the best name choice. One other name suggested was the College of Applied Arts and Sciences, but because it was too close to the College of Arts and Sciences' name it was discarded. Stowe said she hopes the name change will affect the college in many positive areas. One change has been the increase in the number of male students in the college. When Stowe first came to the University only about 6 percent of the students in the college's curriculum were male. This figure has since increased to about 9 percent and is expected to continue increas-

As with most deans of any college, Stowe has goals and objectives planned for the future of the College of Human Ecology and she hopes to see those goals met.

"I would like to see a growth in sophistication and quality of our research program and I want to see our doctoral program expand because there is a tremendous need for qualified persons in the outside job market," Stowe said.

She said she also wants to be able to place undergraduate students in more varied and expanded positions and to get rid of the stereotyped home economics image. Besides increasing the services available now and establishing a 'new image' for the college, the college is also adding some new majors to meet the needs of the changing environment.

"We now have a pre-med program in nutritional sciences since medical schools simply don't have time to go into all of the aspects of good nutrition, and with the heavy emphasis on wellness rather than getting cured, it is filling a void that has been present for a long time," she said.

The College of Human Ecology has also started a dual program in nutrition and exercise science through the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure

One concern of the University which Stowe isn't taking lightly is the concern of recruiting and declining enrollment.

"One thing we have done is to establish an alumni network and the University has copied our system since it looks like it works so well, and we have increased our mailing lists and we do a lot of visiting to high schools," she said.

One thing the college is doing a little differently is going to the science and math departments of high schools instead of the traditional home economics classes. This is intended to bring in more nontraditional students who want a degree in the college but with more of a science background, she said.

"Our basic philosophy is the interaction of human beings and environment, so we should be designing goods and services that enhance quality of human life. So we are graduating students who are getting in the industry that designs the goods and services and the background in this college is a big bonus," she said.

"One of the best aspects of teaching here is knowing this University is one of the top five in the country and we have some of the best faculty in the country here at K-State, both in administration and teaching," Stowe said.

protect their land-based arsenal. They also have attained parity with the United States in the development of cruise missiles, have a crude but workable laser weapon capable of blinding spy satellites, and are continuing to outpace the Pentagon in building tanks, planes, helicopters and artillery, the study says.

The Soviets are developing two or three new intercontinental ballistic missiles, the booklet states.

"By the mid-1990s, the Soviet ICBM force will have been almost entirely replaced with new systems, a number of which may violate SALT II constraints," it stated.

The Soviets maintain the singlewarhead SS-25 missile is an allowable modernization of the aging SS-13, a contention dismissed by the Pentagon. Last January, Weinberger put the number of operational SS-25s at 45, but the booklet raised that number to "over 70 launchers deployed."

The United States does not have any mobile missiles, although it is now developing one,

Lobbyists seek farmland retention

From Staff and Wire Reports

Lobbyists for farm groups asked lawmakers in Topeka Tuesday to approve both a proposal to grant a "stay of execution" to some farmers who face losing their land and one designed to help farmers after they lose their land.

The lobbyists urged the House Agriculture and Small Business Committee to endorse a bill which would allow a court to keep creditors from foreclosing on mortgages on a farmer's land or equipment for up to three years, if the farmer pays interest on the fair market value of his land or equipment.

They also asked the Senate Agriculture Committee to endorse a bill to require creditors to give farmers the first chance to lease back the land they have lost, when the creditor decides to lease out the Supporters of the measures said they are designed to keep family farmers on the land during troubled times. They said the proposals must be considered important parts of any package of farm legislation.

"If you don't have a large bandage, but you have a lot of bandaids, you can effect a large bandage out of that," said Howard Tice, a lobbyist for the Kansas Association of Wheat

But opponents claim the proposals would end up hurting all farmers because they would burden financial institutions, who would pass additional costs onto their borrowers.

foreclosure bill, a farmer could go to court to prevent a creditor from foreclosing on a mortgage on his land or equipment. The court then could grant a one-year "stay of execution" as many as three times.

The farmer would be required to pay interest on the revised fair market value of his land or equipment, or both, as determined by the court. The interest rate would be 2 percent higher than the rate on certain U.S. Treasury bills, which the federal government sells to raise money. Currently, the interest rate for such bills is about 7 percent.

Such a rate might be lower than the interest rate farmers pay on their mortgages, said Ivan Wyatt, president of the Kansas Farmers Union. In addition, the farmer would not have to make payments on the original debt, he said.

Jan Flora, associate professor of sociology, sees the proposal as a step in the right direction.

There is a need for some kind of relief on interest rates for farmers who are in a so-called 'moderate' amount of trouble," he said.

But Freda Dobbins, a Goff farmer, said the measure might hurt farmers who are struggling to stay in business but are not facing foreclosure. She said financial institutions might have to make up for losses from such court actions by passing costs onto borrowers. Hearings on the bill will continue Thursday, said Rep. Lloyd Polson, R-Vermillion, the House panel's chairman.

Under the House-approved leasing bill, a creditor would face a fine of up to $500 a day if it does not give a farmer who lost his land the first chance at leasing it back. The farmer would have to have the necessary equipment to farm the land, or be able to pay the rent in cash in advance.

Wyatt said the bill, if enacted, would help keep family farmers in business and on their land. But Jim Maag, a lobbyist for the Kansas Bankers Association, said the proposal would slow the transfer of land to people who could viably farm it.

Flora sees a problem of farmers and bankers staying on friendly terms in the lease-back proposal.

"Farmers will probably not feel very positive toward bankers if their land is taken away," he said. "There will be a big question mark as to how farm managers will get along with their new landlords."

The Senate committee could debate the bill by the end of the week, said Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, the panel's chairman.

City commissioners discuss buying Elks Club building

By SUE DAWSON Collegian Reporter

In a work session Tuesday afternoon, the Manhattan City Commission discussed the possibility of purchasing and renovating the Elks Club, 423 Houston St., for recreational and city office use.

Mayor Suzanne Lindamood asked city staff to prepare proposals for the addition of the Elks Club to the proposed $2.8 million Quality of Life Bond Issue. The moving of city offices into the facility and the leasing of additional gym space at local elementary schools or Luckey High School are also scheduled to appear on the bond question.

The proposal to move the city offices was prompted in part to allow the current facility to be used for recreational activities.

K-State splits another pair with NAIA team

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

The ups and downs continue for the K-State baseball team.

The Wildcats split a double-header Friday with National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics team Fort Hays State in what Coach Gary Vaught called the "worst exhibition of baseball I've ever seen."

The team then turned around on Sunday to defeat one of the finer teams in the Midwest, the Creighton Blue Jays, in a 15-inning brawl.

On Tuesday, the rollercoaster ride continued as the Wildcats split another doubleheader to another NAIA school, The School of the Ozarks.

The Wildcats claimed the first game, 6-4, and lost in the second game, 7-2, to the Bobcats of Point Lookout, Mo. The games moved

K-State's record to 13-10 on the season. "There is no enthusiasm....My dad always told me that there is always a light at the end of the tunnel. Right now I think it's a train coming at us," Vaught said. The first game started as the three previous home games had, with the Wildcats finding themselves behind on the scoreboard early in the game. The wind was blowing out at Frank Myers Field and two pop flies also blew off of Bobcat bats in the second and fourth innings straight over the outfield walls. Going into the fifth inning the Wildcats and starting pitcher Scott Lichlyter found K-State down, 2-0.

Then a two-out Bobcat error in the bottom of the fifth opened the floodgate for K-State.

The error by Ozarks first baseman Fred Rumberger allowed K-State second baseman Brent Gibson to reach first. Then, a pair of walks by the Bobcats starting pitcher Mike Battaglia set up a three-run triple by center fielder Gary Pridey. With Pridey on third, first baseman Otto Kaifes stepped up to the plate and crushed his fifth home run of the season over the left field wall

Catcher Jeff Turtle punched a double into left-center keeping the Wildcat inning alive and was followed by an error allowing designated hitter Mike Hamacher to reach first and advancing Tom Parsons who was running for Turtle.

The Bobcats thought they had picked Hamacher off of first, but in the confusion Parsons dashed across the plate attracting a throw and allowing Hamacher to advance to second.

The Bobcats managed two runs off of Lichlyter to start the sixth, so with two outs Vaught brought in reliever Paul Iceman and 16 pitches and four outs later Iceman had done his job and earned a save.

In the second game Vaught shuffled his lineup to add some hitting and ended up getting the opposite as the Wildcats managed only three hits. The loss for K-State went to Robby Guinn who was bounced out of the game in one and two-thirds innings after surrendering five

Following the games, Vaught was trying to figure out what was going wrong. "Our batting average ought to be our ERA and our ERA ought to be our batting average. We've got it all wrong, but you can't give up," Vaught said.

The Wildcats will be in action 3 p.m. today when the Washburn Ichabods come to town.

Wildcat tennis team wins KSU Invitational championship

By TONY CARBAJO Sports Writer

The K-State men's tennis team ended its losing streak of late by knocking off Bethel College and Kearney State in Nebraska in consecutive matches to claim the top spot in the KSU Invitational, Tuesday.

Fort Hays State also participated in the tournament, but the Wildcats did not have to meet the Tigers on the way to capturing first place. Kearney State downed Fort Hays State in the opening round.

The matches were played under windy conditions at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area tennis courts and the teams battled the elements all afternoon.

The team started the day by sweeping Bethel in the opening round match, 9-0. Only one contest went to three sets.

"We were happy about how we played in the wind," K-State Assistant Coach Rick Bellah said. "(The team) is getting better with each match. In general, it is hard to play in high winds. The guys really pulled through.'

After defeating Bethel in the opening round, the Wildcats moved on to face Kearney State.

K-State, again came out of the match almost untouched, as the team dropped just one doubles match and lost one singles match by virtue of a default at the No. 2 singles position.

Deon Botha, the teams No. 1 singles player, continued his winning ways by knocking off Nathan Regier of Bethel and Ted Rozman of Kearney State in straight sets. Also posting two straight set victories were Scot Sandlin, No. 4; and Zane Burke, No. 5.

"The guys came through in the clutch," Bellah said. "It could have been closer matches, but the guys came through. They showed a lot of character playing under such adverse conditions."

The men's team will be in action Thursday with a home dual against Washburn. Friday, the men's and women's teams will begin Big Eight Conference play at home against

Blue Devils say they don't need high-fives to win NCAA

By The Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. - Even though Duke players avoid a lot of emotional displays of fist-waving and hand-slapping, Blue Devil coach Mike Krzyzewski doesn't agree with descriptions of his team as robots who win in a wooden fashion.

"I don't think (people who say that) have been around our team," Krzyzewski said. "I do think we're a close-knit group. This is a special team. (But) when commentators don't see high-fives, they don't think you're having fun.

"Sometimes just grabbing a guy's hand and looking in his eyes is more emotional than jumping around," Krzyzewski said. Krzyzewski says the key to winning which the Blue Devils have done 36 times this season - is concentration "If you get too emotional, especially during a game, it (blocks) your ability to think," Krzyzewski said. "You use up energy with that emotion. We really like each other. We there (in Dallas), I think we'll be emotional." Duke will have to get past Kansas, a team the Blue Devils defeated for the NIT Big Apple championship in early December, to get think a lot of each other. If we won down to the NCAA championship game. A victory in Saturday's semifinals would give the Blue Devils a chance to meet the winner of the Louisville-LSU game for the national championship on Monday

Duke senior forward David Henderson said the Blue Devil's subdued demeanor may be the result of some early disappointments. He says the senior class remembers where they came from - an 11-17 season in 1983.

"We were once the team that was laughed at - now we're highly regarded," Henderson said. "We are the team that's hunted now. But because we were highly regarded as freshmen, people expected a lot right away. It doesn't work that way in the (Atlantic Coast Conference)."

"I definitely think it's ironic," said senior guard Johnny Dawkins. "We accomplished every goal we set out to accomplish in one season. Maybe it hasn't sunk in. When it's over, we'll get together and have a party."

Krzyzewski said each game is a coaching challenge because teams believe they can beat Duke. But Krzyzewski acknowledges that he doesn't view the 1986 Duke team as a great team. "When I think of a great team, I think of invincible," Krzyzewski said. "People look at us and say, 'We could beat them this way or that way.

'The best team I've ever seen is the 1975 Indiana team. When they warmed up, you were afraid of them, and when you played them, you were afraid of them - and when the game was over, you knew you had a right to be afraid of them," Krzyzewski said.

"We don't have the dominating center -I've heard that a team cannot win a national championship without a true winner," Henderson said. "But we have a bunch of winners on our ball club. You give it everything you've got for two days and it can

Louisville guard senses national title for Cards

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - For Louisville's Jeff Hall the memory of watching an NCAA championship game from the stands after being eliminated from the Final Four still lingers, so making a second trip to college basketball's championship series is not good enough. Hall was a freshman in 1983 when the Cardinals lost to Houston in the semifinals in Albuquerque. He played about 10 minutes as a reserve guard. "It was a very exciting moment," the 6-foot-4 Hall said Tuesday of his first trip to the championships. "You grow up dreaming you'll be on a team like that.

"But what I really remember is sitting in the stands and watching the championship game. A lot of teams get there and kind of stall. They don't retain the killer instinct because they made the goal of getting to the Final

This time around, Hall will have more to say about whether Louisville advances past Louisiana State after Saturday's semifinal in Dallas.

In his starting role as second guard and zone buster, Hall is averaging 10.4 points per game, one of five starters in double figures this season for the No. 7 Cardinals.

"This is not to take away anything from my freshman year, but it means more being a starter and being a senior," Hall said. "It's special to know you're going to be starting in a Final Four game, that you'll have more impact.

Hall and fellow seniors Milt Wagner and Billy Thompson are sharing their experience with the younger members of the team, like freshman center Pervis Ellison and sophomore forward Herbert Crook. But Hall isn't so certain that's necessary

"There's probably more pressure when you get to the Final Four, even though each game along the way is just as important because if you lose you're out," Hall said.

'They (younger players) have played in some big games this year and reacted well. I know their character and I feel good. They're confident they can play.'

Memories of Duke haunt KU's Kellogg

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Kansas forward Ron Kellogg is looking for a little bit of revenge Saturday when the No. 2 Jayhawks meet top-ranked Duke at Dallas in a semifinal game of the NCAA tournament.

Duke's 92-86 victory over Kansas in the final of the Big Apple NIT Tournament in New York at the start of the season is like a bad dream the 6-foot-5 senior from Omaha can't forget.

"Coach (Larry) Brown won't let me. He reminds me all the time," said Kellogg, who scored 20 points in the loss.

"My man — (David) Henderson - scored 30 on me. That's the most anybody's ever scored on me. He was making his first start of the year and I didn't have any idea what to expect." Henderson, who was making his first start, hit 12 of 14 field goal attempts in the

"It's kind of like revenge," he said of the Final Four rematch

"They beat us the first time and we remember that. They do have a great team. They're quick and have excellent shooters," Kellogg

Kellogg has been somewhat hampered by a sore foot throughout the NCAA tournament but scored 12 points Sunday in Kansas' victory over North Carolina State in the NCAA Midwest Regional championship game in Kansas City. "It's not 100 percent, but it's OK," he said of the foot. "I just do the best I can when I'm out there." Greg Dreiling, KU's 7-1 senior center, also has unhappy memories of the first meeting with Duke. "The first time we played them, it wasn't a good game for me," said Dreiling, who scored just eight points in 16 minutes before fouling out. Better performances from the two seniors will be a key if the Jayhawks intend to upset Duke.

Brown's frame of mind aids LSU's court play

By The Associated Press BATON ROUGE, La. - Louisiana

State Coach Dale Brown made up his mind early this season not to worry about NCAA investigators, rival coaches, lost players or lost games. Now, all he has to worry about is winning the national championship. Brown figures his new mellow attitude is a key to the Tigers' celebrated rise from 22-11 obscurity to the Final Four.

"I know that a coach's attitude is reflected in the team," Brown said. "I've enjoyed this season more than any other. I'm not tired. I'm having more fun.'

It's a marked change from the Dale Brown of the past. Beset by a three-year NCAA recruiting probe, the in-house bugging of the LSU athletic director's office, and the loss of freshman superstar Tito Horford to Miami, Brown began the season in a rage, cursing NCAA investigators from the pages of Sports Illustrated and threatening to quit any day.

Long before those troubles, Brown was famous for temper tantrums directed at referees, other coaches, their players and his own teams.

To mold former reserves like Don Redden, Ricky Blanton and Anthony Wilson into starters, he practiced motivation as never before. Just before the team's first NCAA tournament game against Purdue, Brown brought a fan dying of brain cancer to a team meeting to talk about how LSU's season was like his own struggle against the odds.

His players responded during the tournament with their best performances of the year.

Now 26-11, LSU meets No. 7 Louisville in Dallas on Saturday.

Brown's adversity may not be behind him entirely. The NCAA probe is continuing, and federal prosecutors have yet to say whether they will file charges over Athletic Director Bob Brodhead bugging his own office in an alleged attempt to eavesdrop on NCAA investigators.

But he says all that is far from his mind right now ."It's like there's an electricity between us now," he said. "There's something you can feel. I don't know if it's magic or ESP, but it really feels good."

From Staff and Wire Reports

Eye experts, regulators and manufacturers have gotten worried over recent reports of visionthreatening infections called corneal ulcers in people who wear extendedwear contact lenses.

In Wisconsin, a 15-year-old boy and his parents are suing a lens manufacturer and seller for $5.3 million after a corneal ulcer robbed the boy of part of his vision. Wisconsin state regulators have ordered optometrists to dispense written warnings about the lenses, and they're thinking about a ban on selling them.

In Minneapolis, the University of Minnesota Hospitals recently stopped prescribing extended-wear lenses for people with healthy eyes after treating a spate of ulcers. The extended-wear lenses can be worn continuously up to 30 days rather than be removed nightly.

Manhattan optometrists recommend the lenses be worn from six to 14 days before taking them out to be cleaned and to give the eyes a rest.

"In Kansas, with the wind and dust problems that we have, the environment that we have, the fact that it is cold in the winter and the heat coming on and drying things out, a good time (to wear the lenses) is certainly a week as far as extended-wear,' said Manhattan optometrist Dr. Gary Young.

Corneal ulcers occur when the protective outer layer of the cornea is breached and germs infect the cornea tissue within. The infection can scar the usually transparent cornea, blocking vision.

Department adds degrees in computers

By The Collegian Staff

Although many departments in the University are facing declining enrollment and budget reductions, the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering is growing.

After a name change from the Department of Electrical Engineering a year ago, the department was granted the right to confer degrees in computer engineering by the Board of Regents on Thursday, March 20. The new degree is in addition to the traditional degree in electrical engineering.

Donald Hummels, professor and head of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, said the computer engineering option is very popular around the country.

Hummels said 30 percent to 40 percent of the present enrollment in the department would probably choose this degree if they had the option.

"Currently, there is a rush on around the country to include these programs," he said.

Hummels said the computer engineering degree is in great demand and it differs from a computer science degree.

"This degree (computer engineering) differs substantially from computer science because of the heavy emphasis on hardware," Hummels Hummels said anyone who employs an electrical engineer will employ a computer engineer. He said IBM, Hewlett Packard and Texas Instruments are some of the companies which would employ a person with a computer engineering

Hummels said people do not want to expand programs in a time of limited resources.

"Because of the need of the graduates and the growth in the department, it (expansion) was easy to justify," Hummels said.

The University of Kansas is the only other school in the state to offer a degree in computer engineering, he

'Color Purple' losses bewilder moviegoers

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - The Motion Picture Academy's overwhelming rejection of "The Color Purple" kept Hollywood uneasily abuzz Tuesday, after an Oscar telecast that for once scored a modest hit with viewers.

The film about a rural black woman's struggle for self-worth had gone into the awards night with 11 nominations, the same number as "Out of Africa" which won seven Oscars, including best picture.

But "The Color Purple" failed to win even once, tying the 1977 movie "The Turning Point" as the most-nominated film to lose in every category

The shutout added to the controversy that already surrounded the academy's snub of Steven Spielberg, who was not even nominated for directing the movie.

"I can't explain it," said Academy president Robert Wise. "Except that maybe it was a reaction of the Academy at large over questioning the integrity of the director's branch. Perhaps the voters felt that the Academy's reputation had been maligned.'

Wise, an Oscar winner for "The Sound of Music" and "West Side Story," was referring to stories suggesting that the 230 members of the director's branch who made the nominations may have been envious of Spielberg's success.

Sydney Pollack, winner as director and co-producer for "Out of Africa," declined to analyze the reason behind "Purple's" failure.

Other winners included Geraldine Page for best actress in 'The Trip to Bountiful,' William Hurt as best actor in "Kiss of the Spider Woman," Anjelica Huston for best supporting actress in "Prizzi's Honor," and Don Ameche as best supporting actor for "Cocoon."

The Oscar show appeared to have recouped some of its previous year's rating losses.

Most critics said the show didn't have enough of Robin Williams' pop-the-balloon humor. Williams, one of three co-hosts, opened the show by trying to get two very proper Price Waterhouse executives to open the winner envelopes early.

Senate bill would ban abortion at med center

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Senate tentatively approved an appropriations bill Tuesday after amending it to include a potential ban on abortions at the University of Kansas Medical Center unless necessary to preserve the life of the mother.

The prohibition was written into a $695 million funding bill for Board of Regents institutions by Sen. Norma Daniels, D-Valley Center.

Under the amendment, it would be illegal for the medical center to spend any state money "to provide medical procedures intended to result in the termination of pregnancy other than by live birth, except when such procedures are necessary to preserve the life of the mother."

An abortion would be allowed only after every reasonable effort has been made to save the child.

"It's something that has bothered me for sometime," Daniels said after the Senate added her amendment to the bill on an unrecorded voice vote. "I hope it ends abortions at the medical center. I don't think state money should be spent paying for any of the cost of an abortion. No state money should be involved."

Daniels said she didn't know how much state money, if any, was used at the medical center. Nor did she have any statistics regarding the number of abortions performed

Dr. Kermit Krantz, chairman of the medical center's Department of Gynecology and Obstetrics, denounced the move and declared no state funds are used at the abortion clinic.

'Norma Daniels doesn't know where she's coming from," Krantz said in a telephone interview. "I pay for my space here. The foundation rents the space here. It's a public foundation. No state funds have ever gone to pay for the termination of a pregnancy.

Krantz said the cost of an abortion covers all charges: rent, utilities, and services of janitors, nurses and physicians.

"The patient pays the bill and he pays for everything," Krantz said. 'They are trying to deprive people of this state of a basic right and that's the right to address their problems." Krantz said the provision for determining a life-threatening situation is vague and not well thought-out. 'If a woman is carrying a Cyclops, or their baby doesn't have a head or what if she's carrying a monster?" Krantz said. "Is that life-threatening?" Krantz said state law prohibited him from discussing the number of abortions performed at the center.

The question of why Americans have allowed this to happen is "the question I have been struggling with most of my life," she said. "The reason we tolerate this is because we have made ourselves powerless before economic dogma," Lappe said. "We put economic dogma above our values and innate sensibilities toward the suffering of values. This is the fundamental problem as I see it - we have sought false gods.

One of these "false gods," Lappe said, is the market mechanism's conversion from a useful device to an ab-

She said the market responds not to human preferences, but rather to wealth, "and those are not the same

In Mexico, for example, she said she didn't see crops growing in order to feed the people, but rather crops intended for export, because a farmer "can make 20 times more growing tomatoes for export than growing food to feed the people.'

The market's blindness and lack of responsiveness are also responsible for increases in world food shortages, Lappe said. "The market is blind. It cannot, by its nature, report back to us...about the costs of production," she said. "It can't report back the cost of such things as soil erosion and the loss of groundwater.'

The market also leads to the concentration of economic power which is in direct conflict with the political democracy needed to end hunger, Lappe said.

"The more widely dispersed the purchasing power, the more the market will respond to human preferences," she said. "The market needs to work to reduce rather than reinforce the concentration of wealth. It can't do this in the modern market structure."

Lappe, citing the American Revolution in 1776, said she believes it is "our birthright as Americans to tell these Third World nations they

Libya's official radio demands assaults on U.S. embassies

Manhattan, Kansas 66506

By The Associated Press

Libya's official radio Wednesday called for Arab suicide squads to attack U.S. embassies and other interests worldwide following armed clashes between U.S. and Libyan forces in the Gulf of Sidra.

The radio exhorted the "Arab nation" to be transformed "in its entirety into suicide squads and into human bombs, missiles and aircraft to deter and resist terrorism and destroy it for good." The radio commentary was monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. in Lon-

The Libyan radio commentary said, "Oh heroes of our Arab nation, let your missiles and suicide cells pursue American terrorist embassies and interests wherever they may be."

Earlier Wednesday, a radical Palestinian faction, Abu Nidal's Fatah Revolutionary Council, similiary threatened retaliation for what it called the "abominable American aggression."

The council said in a statement issued in Damascus, Syria, that "anything American has become from now on a target for our revolutionaries."

U.S. officials say American forces Tuesday destroyed two patrol boats and damaged a Libyan missile radar site in the second day of confrontation over Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy's claim to the entire Gulf of Sidra up to 40 miles offshore.

The United States says territorial waters end 12 miles offshore, the generally recognized international

U.S. officials say the clash began Monday with Libya firing six missiles at American warplanes on maneuvers in the gulf. The United States retaliated against patrol boats and a missile site on shore, U.S. officials said.

There were no reports of fighting Wednesday. Associated Press photographer Giulio Broglio" said Tripoli was quiet, with no signs of military activity.

The Reagan administration charged that Abu Nidal's faction, backed by Khadafy, carried out terrorist attacks at Rome and Vienna airports last Dec. 27 in which 20 people died, including five Americans.

Reagan banned U.S. economic links to Libya and ordered Americans to leave the country. Americans have served as consultants in Libya's petroleum and construction industries.

A State Department spokesman, Michael Austrian, estimated that perhaps "a couple hundred" Americans remain in Libya despite The Egyptian government called for restraint and an end to "acts of violence" in the area. Its statement did not mention Libya or the United States by name or blame either na-

Other Arab factions and nations, including Syria, pledged their support to Libya, as did Iran. Israel and America's European allies generally backed the United States.

In Moscow, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev told a banquet for Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid, "The actions of the United States constitute a challenge to the world public as a whole and an encroachment on commonly recognized civilized relations."

He said the Soviet Union supported Libyans in "standing up for their sacred right to freedom and independence from imperialist encroachments." Communist-ruled China also charged the United States had violated "the norms governing international relations."

Police said they shot dead 11 blacks Wednesday at a mass meeting on a soccer field in a black homeland and killed 13 more in four overnight clashes with rioters.

Also Wednesday, courts overturned banning orders against three prominent anti-apartheid activists, including Rowley Arenstein, a white communist from Durban, for failing to give sufficient reasons for the ban-

Arenstein, 68, had been banned since 1960 and was banned for two years in the 1950s. He was under virtual house arrest until the order was relaxed slightly in recent years.

In 1966, Arenstein was convicted of furthering the aims of communism and served a four-year jail term. He now runs an insurance claims firm in Durban.

The overnight violence reported by police headquarters in Pretoria was among the bloodiest this year in South Africa.

Reporters who visited the scene of the soccer field killings in Winterveld, a community of 1 million in Bophuthatswana homeland, 60 miles north of Pretoria, estimated 100 people were injured and more than 1,000 taken into police custody.

District police commander Col. M.A. Molope said tens of thousands of people had gathered illegally and threw stones and gasoline bombs at police who ordered them to disperse.

U.S. flies Honduran troops to border

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras - U.S. military helicopters with American crews ferried Honduran soldiers to a remote border area Wednesday where up to 1,500 Sandinista troops were reported trying to fight their way back to Nicaragua.

U.S. officials here said 14 helicopters from Palmerola air base were carrying infantry and artillery units to the "Las Vegas salient" about 120 miles east of the capital. The salient is a triangular-shaped area of Honduras that juts into Nicaragua along the irregular frontier between the two countries. It has long been the site of a major camp of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels, called Contras, who fight the Sandinista government from bases in southern Honduras.

Honduran military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said 1,500 Sandinistas crossed the frontier last Saturday in pursuit of rebels and were trapped inside Honduras by

Contras who cut off their retreat. Other sources put the number of Nicaraguan government troops at nearer 800 and said most probably would slip through the net because it was difficult to block all paths through the jungled mountain ter-

But Frank Arana, a spokesman for the largest Contra group, the Nicaragua Democratic Front, said Wednesday, "Everything is under control. The invaders are not going to return to Nicaragua. Our troops have them surrounded." He refused to elaborate.

U.S. officials said about 100 Sandinistas and 80 Contras had been killed in four days of fighting.

Accounts of fighting could not be verified independently. Honduran military sources said soldiers were ordered to keep journalists out of the Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government denies any incursion and says the reports are designed to win U.S. aid for the Contras.

Proposal to include Washburn as state school

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House Ways and Means Committee Wednesday endorsed a proposal to make Topeka's Washburn University a part of the state university system in 1988.

On unrecorded voice vote, the committee sent to the House a bill which would put Washburn under the control of the state Board of Regents, which supervises six state universities and Kansas Technical Institute in Salina. Washburn would become part of the system in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1988

Local property taxes now help support the municipal university, and that support would continue under the plan the committee endorsed. The panel's endorsement came on an unrecorded voice vote without discussion following an hour-long hearing.

"This completes the university system approach in the state of Kansas," said John Green, Washburn's president.

Witnesses, who included House Speaker Mike Hayden, paraded before the committee to support the plan as a way to improve Kansas higher education system and allow the university to grow. They also said suh a move would eliminate competition between Washburn and the regents institutions.

Green said bringing Washburn into the system would prevent it from overburdening students by increasing tuition. Also, he said Topeka residents would not be as likely to face an increase in property taxes if the university wanted to grow.

Tuition, now about $1,500 a year, has doubled over the past five years, Green said. Currently, Topeka residents pay about 15 mills in property taxes to support the university. A mill is $1 in property taxes for every $1,000 of assessed property valuation. Currently, the state provides nearly $5 million a year in aid to Washburn. University officials told the committee bringing Washburn into the regents system would cost the state only an additional $2.5 million overall in FY 1990 and 1991. The money would cover the loss of revenues from certain funds state universities cannot use.

The state also would increase its aid annually to cover normal budget increases caused by increasing expenses. Projections submitted by a Washburn official show the state providing about $11 million to Washburn by FY 1992. Support from tuition and local taxes would remain constant at about 12 million annually

But Green said the bill was not a "bail out" for Washburn or Topeka.

"We are willing to continue local support," he said. Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, criticized the proposal. Koplik said current appropriations for the regents system were inadequate, and adding Washburn to the system would force the regents' tact sports that have a high risk of universities to compete within the system for money.

Committee approves draft of AIDS policy

By ERIN EICHER Staff Writer

The University AIDS Committee adjourned for the last time Wednesday after approving a final draft of the policy on acquired immune deficiency syndrome The committee discussed changes in an earlier draft before approving the final version which will now be sent to William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services.

Sutton will be responsible for distributing copies of the draft to the University president, faculty and student senates and other interested groups. The goal is to establish the official University policy by the end of the semester, said Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students. Specific changes the committee made in the draft were in the section covering participation in athletic activities and the the proposed standing committees. The revised policy states that decisions on whether an AIDS carrier can be involved in athletics should be based on a physician's recommendation, with the intent being to avoid conopen wounds and collision injuries.

An earlier copy of the draft listed specific sports that students carrying the AIDS virus should be advised not to participate in on varsity and intramural levels. This list included football, basketball, softball, track events and doubles tennis.

Dr. Guy Smith, sports physician at Lafene Student Health Center. recommended the revised draft eliminate this list in favor of the physician's individualized deci-

The original draft recommended the establishment of two standing committees - the first to ensure policies and procedures are followed and to implement educational programs, the other to address individual problem situations that might arise.

The final draft eliminated the second committee. Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney, said if a problem requiring a difficult decision arose, a standing committee would not be able to address the situation on an individual basis.

Should a problem arise, a committee specifically formed to deal

Beirut car-bomb explosion kills 8

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A car bomb killed eight people and wounded 80 on Wednesday when its load of TNT exploded in front of an east Beirut building housing an office of President Amin Gemayel's Phalange Party.

Police also reported that a series of artillery exchanges and gunbattles in and around Beirut killed 14 people in Lebanon's bloodiest day in several weeks.

At least 70 people, mostly civilians, were wounded in the fighting between Christians and Moslems in the capital and the hills to the east, police reported.

The car bomb contained as many as 440 pounds of TNT, according to an estimate by police explosives expert Roland Jawdeh. It blew up in the Ashrafieh neighborhood outside a five-story apartment

The blast set the building on fire and trapped dozens of people on upper floors. Firemen used ladders to save people and rescue teams battled through choking smoke to drag charred bodies from the rub-

Buildings for 50 yards on either side of the apartment building were damaged, and 30 cars were set on fire. The explosion gouged a crater 8 feet deep in the street.

Another bomb exploded two hours earlier in a six-story building where another office of the right-wing Phalange Party is located. Police said six civilians were wounded in that blast.

Gorbachev wants U.S.-Soviet talks

MOSCOW - Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Wednesday sharply criticized the United States for its armed clashes with Libya, and proposed opening talks on withdrawing all U.S. and Soviet warships from the Mediterranean.

Gorbachev spoke at a Kremlin banquet for Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid. The official news agency Tass carried the text of the speech, Gorbachev's first reported public comment on the U.S.-Libyan confrontation in the Mediterranean. The official Soviet media had condemned the U.S. actions earlier.

In his speech, Gorbachev said the Soviet Union has to permanently base ships in the Mediterranean only because of the U.S. presence

He said the Soviets were prepared to open talks on withdrawal of Soviet and U.S. fleets from the Mediterranean.

House rejects school finance bill

TOPEKA - The House Wednesday rejected a joint conference committee's agreement on a school finance bill, prompting the two houses to send its six members back to the bargaining table trying to reach another compromise.

Renamed to the third panel were Sens. Joe Harder, R-Moundridge; Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, and Nancy Parrish, D-Topeka, and Reps. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster; Denise Apt, R-Iola, and Bill Reardon,

The new panel scheduled no meeting, pending the outcome Thursday of an attempt to get the House to adopt a resolution sponsored by Crumbaker and Apt which would suspend a legislative rule requiring the passage of a school funding measure by Monday.

If the House adopts the resolution, it will go to the Senate which also must adopt it to give the Legislature some breathing room on working out a school finance plan for the 1986-87 school year. The Senate has resisted suspending the deadline, which is designed to force lawmakers to enact a school finance plan before the end of the session so school boards and administrators know by mid-April what budget limits they will be under and how much state aid they will have in building their budgets.

Experts identify crew's remains

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - Pathologists have identified the remains of at least six of the seven astronauts killed in the explosion of space shuttle Challenger, according to relatives and published reports.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration declined to comment on the reports. The agency has said repeatedly since it announced March 9 that divers had found part of the crew cabin and remains on the ocean floor that there would be no further statements until the operation was complete.

"We do that out of deference to the families," said NASA spokesman Hugh Harris.

Seven crew members died when Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28.

Sources told The Associated Press that remains have been recovered and that parts of most of the astronauts had been identified. They declined to say how many.

American divorce rate increases

WASHINGTON - Fewer Americans got married last year than at any time in nearly a decade, and the divorce rate headed up again after a brief decline, new government statistics show.

Overall, preliminary numbers from the National Center for Health Statistics indicate that Americans were still twice as likely to marry as to divorce last year: 10.2 marriages per 1,000 people compared with 5.0 divorces.

But the marriage rate was down from 10.5 a year earlier, and the 1985 level was the lowest since 1977.

The divorce rate, meanwhile, edged up 2 percent. After peaking at 16.4 marriages per 1,000 people in 1946, the rate dipped to 9.9 in 1952 and remained below 10 until 1968 when it climbed to 10.4 per 1,000. It edged up slightly in the early 1970s, dipped to 9.9 in 1976 and 1977, then climbed back to 10.6 by 1982 before beginning to slide again.

Kansas man advertises for wife

GARDEN CITY - Robert Todd's search for a pudgy, red-headed wife is attracting attention.

He got a standing ovation at a local restaurant after being recognized as the man who had advertised for a wife, and since his search started getting nationwide publicity, there have been calls from radio stations in New York, Maine and Oklahoma.

It all started when the twice-divorced Todd, 55, took up a dare and placed a sign in the back of his truck saying, "Wife wanted desperately! I will negotiate. Pudgy one preferred. Over 25.'

The Garden City Telegram published a picture of Todd and his sign on Saturday, also transmitting the photo on The Associated Press network to newspapers throughout the country. Several women from California have called the Telegram wanting to contact Todd, who says he's serious about his search and plans to answer all inquiries.

"I'm a ladies' man," he said. "I enjoy talking to women. I could talk to them all day. I give them a little credit being better than men.

Todd said he has struggled with a drinking problem for years, but feels he is off booze for good now. He arrived in Garden City last August after completing a treatment program at Valley Hope Alcohol and Drug Treatment Center in Norton.

"With God's help and love, I'm going to make it," he said. He now manages a group of apartments and calls himself a 'prairie home handyman," but he has been looking for a fulltime job, as well as a wife.

He says his ideal woman is a 5-foot 6-inch redhead, 30 to 45, weighing between 155 and 180 pounds. She should enjoy oldtime country music, fishing and just driving around.

James Coffman, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, considers the reciprocal agreement made between K-State and the University of Nebraska College of Veterinary Medicine one of his best achievements as dean.

Dean's goal to increase vet med college faculty

By The Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This is the eighth in a series of articles about University deans. Tomorrow the series will feature Robert Kruh, dean of the Graduate School.)

Increasing faculty has been and continues to be a major goal of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said James Coffman, dean of the college.

Coffman emphasized two accomplishments he has made during his term as dean — the University of Nebraska, Lincoln agreement, in which K-State accepts Nebraska students in veterinary medicine and Nebraska accepts K-State students in veterinary medicine; and the long-term funding and implementation of faculty enhancement.

"There is a need to address the problem of too few faculty," Coffman said. Currently, 65 tenured faculty teach in the college, compared to the staff of 100 faculty suggested when the new Veterinary Medicine Center was built, Coffman said.

"In terms of faculty-student ratios we rank 26 out of 27 in the United States," Coffman said.

The current faculty-student ratio is .22 faculty members to one student. "We're about 35 faculty short of the

"We're about 35 faculty short of the mean of our (Board of) Regents designated peers," he said. "That's consistent with the figure that we're 26 out of 27 in faculty-student ratio." Last year only 60 faculty members out of 90 in the college had the title of assistant professor or above, he said.

"Our No. 1 goal is to bring that level up," Coffman said.
"We've made significant steps in the

"We've made significant steps in the right direction," Coffman said, citing the addition of faculty members to the college

The faculty added have been to "plug holes in the basics," he said.

"As we are able to expand faculty there are three basic things in mind," he said. "First, to optimize what we've already got — a strong program in undergraduate instruction and a solid program in basic services.

"Second, to establish and maintain specialty services in a number we can handle in a quality way. And, third, to substantially increase our research activity."

One short-term goal, to be accomplished within the next two years, is major equipment replacement, especially in radiology, he said.

Coffman received his undergraduate and graduate education at K-State and became a member of the University faculty in 1965. He taught at the University until 1969. Following this he taught at the University of Missouri in Columbia from 1971 to 1981. He returned to K-State in 1981 and became dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine in July 1994.

$4 small price to pay for alcohol education

A bill under consideration by the Kansas Legislature would increase driver license fees by about $4, and would raise about $2.1 million. A portion of the funds would be used for drug and alcohol education programs in the state's schools.

The measure is a good one. The benefits far outweigh the costs drug and alcohol abuse is becoming an increasingly severe problem nationwide, and educational efforts to stem the tide of abuse are necessary.

Of the money raised, $1.1 million will go to the state highway fund, to offset the costs of licensing examinations, which years increase in fees. are now draining the fund. Of the remaining money, $500,000 will be applied to drug and alcohol education, and the balance to driver education programs.

Driver education is a critical element in reducing highway fatalities and improving transportation. Along the same lines, operation of a motor vehicle while under the influence of drugs or alcohol is a huge killer, especially among the nation's youth. By applying this money to education programs, Kansas will be doing its part to solve the pro-

Some concern has been raised about an across-the-board increase causing financial stress for fixed-income individuals, but the small increase should not be a a major burden. For all of that, the recent decline in gasoline prices will be more than enough to offset the once-every-four-

A measure such as this is an excellent way to cut down on the number of tragic alcohol-related accidents on Kansas highways and drug-related problems of Kansas youth.

Senate fee committee needs a clear mission the feasibiltiy of an athletic fee.

There are many questions that need to be answered regarding an athletic fee and it is commendable that Student Senate wants to establish a committee to study the issue. But before a committee is established, the goals and purpose of the committee need to be clearly defined.

What exactly is the committee going to study? What are some of the questions they will answer? Who are they going to get their information from? Are they going to reach any conclusions? Are they going to make any recommendations?

Senate also needs to set a timetable for the committee. A deadline for a final report needs to be set and progress reports need to be made.

The committee should come up with solid answers about the many questions students have about the athletic fee.

Why does K-State need an athletic fee? Five years ago the athletic department was in good financial shape. Why do we need a fee now?

Where exactly is the money go-

Student Senate is considering ing to go? Will it be used to help establishing a committee to study the athletic department pay their part of the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum? Will it go toward recruiting expenses? How can students be sure the athletic fee money is going where the athletic department says it will

> Will an athletic fee really serve the students of K-State? What if a student would rather spend the money to see a ballet, a musical or some other event in McCain Auditorium? Is it fair to make students who don't go to games pay the fee?

How will tickets be allocated? Can students be assured all who pay the fee and want tickets receive them?

Can K-State justify tacking an athletic fee on top of tuition increases when financial aid is being cut?

These questions and others need to be answered by an unbiased committee. But for the committee to be effective, the purpose of the committee needs to be clearly defined and the goals of the committee clearly stated before it is established.

Finding a novel cure to martial difficulties

Norman Mailer wrote that there are four stages of marriage. First there's the affair, then the marriage, then children and finally the fourth stage without which he said we cannot know a person - the divorce.

Mailer, a novelist of critical acclaim, may be correct. Last year fewer Americans got married than at any time in the past 10 years - a sure sign some people fear divorce - and 2 percent more Americans were granted a divorce.

According to one theorist, there is one "cure" for the inevitable problems that lead so many to ugly scenes in divorce court. Bartholomew the Englishman, an encyclopedist during the 13th century, said magnetism is the cure.

"This kind of stone (magnet) restores husbands to wives and increases elegance and charm," Bartholomew wrote of the mysterous properties of magnets.

It is difficult to understand the attraction between some people who marry, and a short time later, divorce.

Many people struggle daily to solve martial problems. Perhaps magnetism could be of some use during these trying times.

Fee survey of questionable merit

Finally the evidence is out.

Ever since talk of implementing an athletic fee of $15 to $20 per student started last fall, the question of exactly who wants such a fee has been asked. Is it Atheltic Director Larry Travis or is it the students who would pay the fee.?

Since Student Senate will decide tonight whether form a task force to "study the feasibility of an athletic fee," the answer to the question is crucial. If students are not interested in such a fee, why set up a task force?

A survey conducted last semester by six students in the college of Business Administration and Richard Coleman, professor in marketing, indicates 77.8 percent of K-State students favor the fee. Tuesday, through a decision by Travis, the survey was finally made public.

The survey consists of 295 telephone interviews and 89 "personal interviews" in which the interviewers "intercepted" students in Both "open-ended qualitative and closedended structured" questions were used, although the number of students surveyed using each technique is not given.

The survey states: "The open-ended questions allowed us to probe deeper into each respondent's attitudes so that stronger opinions could be brought out." The closedended questions were provided in an appendix to the study.

The first question asked students how many hours per week they spend at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Questions No. 2 and No. 3 dealt with information on the student's participation in intramural sports and varsity athletics and, while it was apparently asked, no statistical results for that information is given. The forth question asked students how many football games the respondent attended and whether the respondent had purchased a football season ticket. Fifty-four percent of those surveyed said they purchased a season ticket. According to an official at the Athletic Ticket Office, approximately 33 percent of students purchased football season tickets last fall.

Question No. 5 asked students to explain, "What do you do if you don't go to the games (do you study, work, go back home, or what?) Why do you go to games?'

The sixth question asked if students planned to purchase a basketball season ticket. Those responding "yes" totaled 39 percent while the ticket office actually sold tickets to approximately 20 percent of the students.

Question No. 7 is the key question. It says: "Several major universities around the country with successful basketball and football programs help finance these with an atheletic fee charge included in every student's tuition. When such a fee is charged, that means students can attend ALL the school's sporting events for free upon showing their ID - without having to buy season tickets or individual game tickets. A $15 per semester athletic fee is typical at these schools. Would you be in favor of having an automatic $15 per semester athletic fee charged of all students at KSU, if that meant that everyone enrolled that semester could go to all games free?" Seventy-seven percent responded "yes."

Thursday, March 27, 1986 - 4

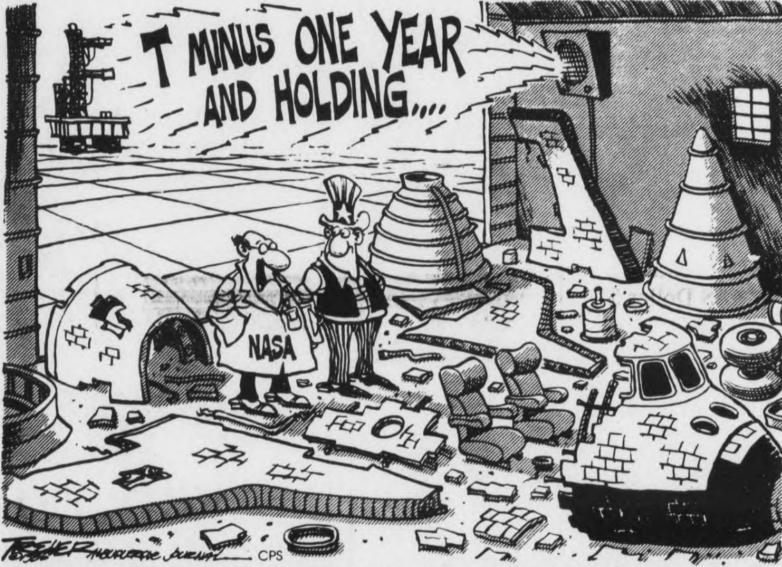

Question No. 8 asked whether the respondent thought attendance to athletic events would increase following a fee increase and question No. 9 asked why the respondent attends to K-State athletic events.

The only criticism a layman can make is that some of the information in question seven is incorrect. Not all students can attend all games. The proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum will have 6,000 student seats for basketball games. Between 13,000 to 18,000 students would pay the fee.

The use of the word "successful" in question No. 7 as well as the fact that the question mentions no less than three times that games would all be "free" appear to be inherent biases. Also, the interviewers had all discussed with Travis how an athletic fee would help his department and that knowledge may have caused the interviewers to stress words such as "successful" and portray the fee favorably.

The disparity between how many students in the survey bought season tickets and the actual percentage of students who purchased season tickets leaves the layman questioning the whether the survey is a representative

As laymen, student senators should seek the advice of several experts on this campus before accepting the survey as fact.

Re: R. Porter Brock's letter, "Artwork offensive," in the March 26 Collegian:

It is unfortunate that Brock finds the artwork displayed in the Union Art Gallery offensive. However, removing the display from the gallery would not only violate the rights of students who are not offended, but also the rights of the artist.

Had Brock read his dictionary, he would have found that "offensive" means "giving painful or unpleasant senations" and is therefore an individual response. Several weeks ago, the gallery displayed paintings of sheep with large marks across their bodies.

Animal lovers may have found those paintings to display cruelty to animals and therefore, offensive. If offensive material were banned from the gallery, following this trend, we would not have an art gallery at

Business advising

At least twice a year every student is to visit an adviser before enrolling in classes for the following term.

I am a transfer student from Marymount College in Salina. In comparing the two schools I prefer the advising system at Marymount. Why? The advising system at Marymount is done by the instructors. They spend many hours advising but at least we (business students) get to know our instructors on a more personal basis. Instructors can suggest to a student what classes to take and in what combinations.

How is this different from K-State? Advising in the College of Business Administration is done by an advisement center who outlines the courses that are necessary. This system works fine for planning a schedule. But I have found the advisers in the center sometimes don't know what a particular class involves. This could cause problems of being snowed under if one enrolls in the wrong combination of classes.

In the Student Handbook for the College of Business Administration, it says, "While still in the BAPP program (freshman and sophomore years), you will be assigned to a faculty adviser within your intended major field, who will become your primary adviser upon your acceptance to the Degree Track Program, with the exception of the general business major."

I am a senior with an accepted degree track program and I have not been assigned a faculty adviser. How many other business students at K-State are in this situation? There is a great faculty/student ration difference but I would like to see at least the junior and seniors have a faculty adviser. This is very important because I feel at the time of graduation, when we are applying for jobs and employers ask for an advisers or instructor's name, we don't know any well enough to feel comfortable putting a name down as a reference.

A relationship between faculty and student has a big impact on the individual as well as the college as a whole. The individuals receiving an instructors advice makes the student feel like they are important rather than another student in business. This feeling could help retention of students in the business college. Many other colleges at K-State have a good relationship between faculty and students. Why can't business?

Mall acquisition nears finish

By KAREN MEIS

Business/Government Writer Within about two weeks, all 77 parcels of privately owned land will have been acquired by the city of Manhattan for the proposed Town Center Mall, said Community Development Coordinator Gary Stith said all but two parcels have been acquired since acquisition began in September 1985.

Demolition of 67 businesses and 27 residential units began in early February. Considered Phase I of the demolition process, eight buildings were leveled at that time. Chuck Williams, engineering supervisor, said Phase II is currently underway and includes demolition of 14 buildings.

In relation to the demolition process, George Champney, owner of Champney Wrecking of Topeka has filed a lawsuit against the city. Champney had submitted the lowest bid for Phase II of the demolition process, but the contract was awarded to Bayer Construction Co. Inc.,

"The project (proposed mall) is being built with government money and discrimination is not allowed,' Champney said. "(And) according to city ordinance, any bid over $10,000 must go to the lowest bidder."

Champney's bid was $226 lower than Bayer Construction's bid.

"I was told that they wanted the contract to go to a local company," Champney said. "If so, why ask for bids all over the country when only local bids will be taken anyway? We

All acquired property is to be leveled by the first part of June, Williams said, and a majority of the businesses east of Third Street are to vacate their buildings by Tuesday.

Bidding for Phase III and Phase IV of the demolition process is scheduled to take place the first and second weeks of April. Phase III involves the demolition of 12 buildings, and Phase IV involves 20 to 25 buildings.

Land acquisition, relocation and demolition costs for the proposed mall are funded by a $9 million Urban Development Action Grant received by the city. Distance specialist gains new respect by setting record

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER Collegian Reporter

For Chris Vanatta, the Paper Tiger Invitational Track Meet held last weekend in Baton Rouge, La., started out like any other meet, but it didn't end up that way.

Vanatta's national-qualifying performance in the women's 5,000 meters earned her top honors in the meet, and her time of 15 minutes, 55 seconds broke a school record previously held by Jacque Struckhoff.

Vanatta's best time for 5,000 meters last season was 17:25 at the Missouri Invitational.

"This race was a breakthrough for her," track Coach Steve Miller said. "To the best of my knowledge that's the fastest time this year (in the 5,000 meters)."

Struckhoff's time of 16:00 in the meet was her second-fastest run, just short of her personal best of 15:57.

Vanatta and Struckhoff have been competing side-by-side throughout the year, but Vanatta doesn't feel any competitiveness between the two.

"Finishing in front of Jacque didn't feel any different than being behind her," Vanatta said. "We don't go out to beat each other. We're trying to help each other out so we can become two of the best runners in the nation.

"I don't feel that there's any competitiveness between us," she said. "We're both on the same team, and we're really close."

Vanatta's record-breaking performance did not surprise Miller.

"Chris has run great all year, but Jacque's also run great all year," Miller said. "Chris has just been lost in the shuffle.

"She (Vanatta) is an incredibly intense person, and I think her intensity and ability are starting to pay off," Miller said.

Vanatta, a junior, transferred to K-State in 1984 from Southeast Missouri State, where she was an National Collegiate Athletic Association Division II cross country champion. Under NCAA regulations, Vanatta had to sit out one year of competition before she could run for K-State.

"I wanted to come to a more competitive program," she said. "The more the competition, the better athletes you have, and when you're around that type of people all the time, you have to improve. I really couldn't improve any more there (at Southeast Missouri State).

"Coach Miller is one of the best track coaches in the nation, and K-State has a nationally known program," she said.

Vanatta's training program, which consists of running and lifting weights for approximately three hours a day, doesn't leave her much free time.

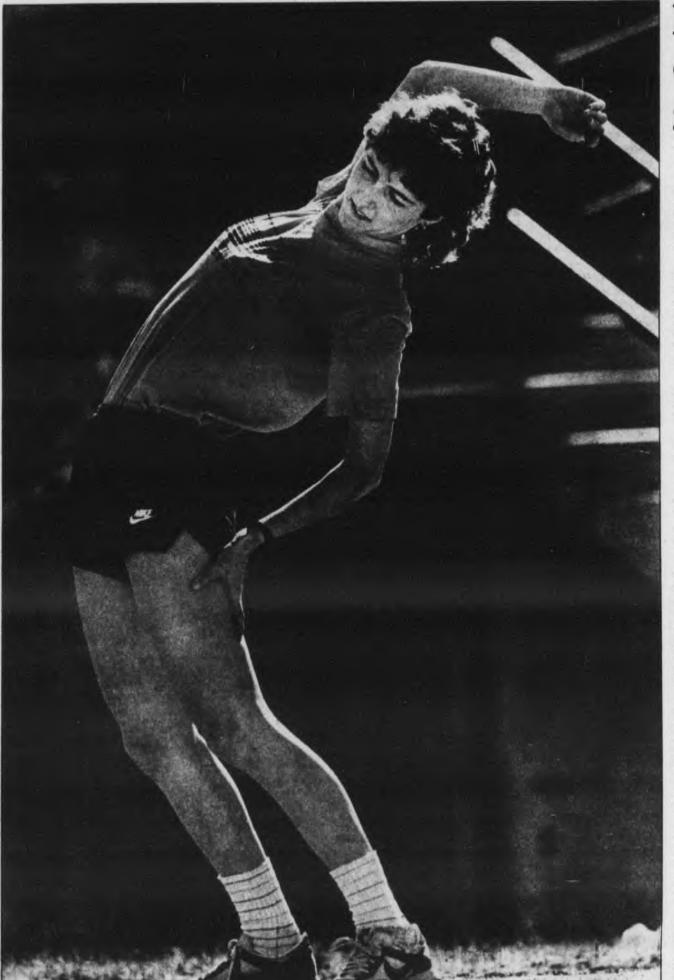

"This school's harder than the one I came from," she said. "I have to study more. It's hard to keep up. I spend a lot of time studying on the busses and in the hotel rooms."

Vanatta is also married, and while some may view it as a disadvantage, both Vanatta and her coach feel that being married definitely works to her advantage.

"She's married and that has given her some stability," Miller said.

Vanatta says her husband Mike, who competed in the Olympic trials in the steeple-chase, knows what she is going through.

"He understands what competing entails and why I'm gone all of the time. That helps a lot," she said. "There's always someone there to come home to — even if you bomb."

Chris Vanatta set a school record in the 5,000-meter run last weekend at the Paper Tiger Invitational Track Meet in Baton Rouge, La. Vanatta's 15 minutes, 55 seconds broke the record previously held by Jacque Struckhoff.

KU players considered giving up

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — The Kansas basketball team left its friendly prairie confines a happy family Wednesday, but it hasn't always been so serene for the nation's second-ranked quintet.

The road to Dallas has been rocky for Manning, Thompson and their teammates. The fun was going out of the game for Manning during the season and Thompson considered quitting the sport a year ago because he struggled to get along with Coach Larry Brown.

Two other starters, Greg Dreiling and Ron Kellogg, have also considered leaving since Brown's arrival three years ago.

Brown's hardnosed coaching methods were not a factor in Manning's midseason disillusionment.

"Things weren't going good and I needed a boost," said Manning, who carries his Superman reputation with a Clark Kent manner. "I stopped trying to be what everyone else wanted me to be."

"Dad kind of surprised me when he asked if I still wanted to play," said Manning. "Quitting wasn't on my mind. I never even thought about it."

Brown arrived in 1983 with a coaching style and philosophy that required adjustments by the players he inherited — Thompson, Kellogg, Dreiling, Jeff Guiot and Kerry Boagni.

Boagni, who played regularly as a freshman, bolted back to the West Coast after one semester in Brown's new system and his roommate, Kellogg, was reportedly ready to leave also.

Guiot, a Kansas prep star, transferred to Pittsburg State, an NAIA school where he starred.

Dreiling entertained turning professional last year, but the 7-foot-1 center was becoming accustomed to Brown's methods and knew another year under his coach's tutelage would prepare him better.

"He demands a lot," said Dreiling.

"He kept telling us what we had to do to win."

Thompson and Kellogg, the outside threats in KU's multifaceted offense, learned to play defense and pass up shots to hit an open teammate.

"He's a demanding coach," said Kellogg. "But what he says is right. I've never seen him be wrong."

Sports Letter

Lack of class

Sports Editor,
I am personally disgusted with the manner in which Steve Bietau, K-State men's tennis coach, handled my dismissal from the men's varsity tennis team.

I would like to thank the Collegian for informing me of my dismissal, since Bietau has yet to contact me. I feel that Bietau handled this situation typical of the way he has tried to coach the tennis team for the last two years — with spontaneity, inconsistency, and little consideration for his players. It takes a classless individual to handle a situation the way he has handled this one.

I would also like to set the record straight about the circumstances surrounding my dismissal. I was not dismissed for disciplinary reasons as was reported in Monday's Collegian, but due to personal differences with

I feel I have an obligation to myself for the best possible education that is offered here at K-State. Upon the decision of the dropping of men's tennis for the 1986-87 school year, I informed Bietau that graduation and starting a career were my primary interests.

However, I did say I was still interested in playing tennis and competing in the Big Eight Conference duals. Apparently, Bietau felt my commitment to education should have been below my commitment to tennis. I strongly felt otherwise.

It is obvious to even the non-tennis enthusiast that internal player-coach problems exist on the men's tennis team. One just has to look at the two years Bietau has been head coach to notice these problems.

Since May 1985, five of the top six men's varsity tennis players have quit or been dismissed from the team. Each one of these players was as committed to K-State tennis as any player could have been. But internal problems, player-coach problems and other related circumstances were too much to handle and not worth fighting.

It is a shame that one person, Steve Bietau, can take the enjoyment out of playing competitive tennis by being so negative.

However, the last two years have not been a total loss. I have learned that some people in this world — Steve Bietau for example — are not worth giving the time of day to. If he wishes to notify me of any remarks, Bietau can tell me through the Collegian, as this is the method he sheepishly chose to inform me of my dismissal.

Wildcats outscore Washburn

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

If it's not one thing, it's another.
Tuesday, the K-State baseball team found itself suffering from poor hitting. Wednesday, the bats came to life, but the pitching suffered.

Despite the fact that K-State gave up 11 runs, 18 hits and committed four errors, the 'Cats defeated the Washburn Ichabods 14-11.

"We came out and hit the ball good, so that means our pitching can't be very good," a frustrated Coach Gary Vaught said following the game.

K-State found itself in an unfamilar position in Wednesday's game — taking an early game lead. The Wildcats were growing use to being behind early. K-State had managed to fall behind in the five games prior to the Washburn conIn the bottom of the first, K-State used a walk, five singles and some nifty base running to jump to an early 4-0 lead, but the Ichabod team, which brought a 16-4 record into the game, was not about to roll over and take loss No. 5 without a fight.

By adding two runs in the second inning and another in the third, Washburn closed the gap to a run.

The Wildcats responded in the bottom of the third by batting around and doubling their score.

Second baseman Pat Stivers was hit by a pitch, moving Donohue to second and leaving Gilbert on third. A sacrifice fly by shortstop Guy Greco

In the bottom of the first, K-State scored Gilbert and advanced sed a walk, five singles and some Donohue to third.

Stivers then stole second, setting up a two-out, two-run single by center fielder Gary Pridey.

Down 8-3 entering the fourth inning, the Ichabods still refused to die. Four runs on six hits in the fourth closed the gap to 8-7 and bounced K-State starting pitcher Tom Smith from the game.

In the top of the fifth, the Ichabods got their heads above water, tying the score at eight.

In the sixth, K-State sent 11 batters to the plate and managed to score five runs on two hits.

Lead-off walks to designated hitter
Otto Kaifes and catcher Jeff Turtle set up an RBI double by Hamacker.
Gilbert added an RBI single,
Donohue sacrificed in a run, and walks to Pridey and Kaifes with the bases full pushed the score to 13-8. Washburn still wasn't done fighting, adding three more runs in the seventh. The Wildcats finally nailed the game shut with a run scored by Hamacker following his lead-off triple in the seventh, putting the score at 14-11.

The victory for the Wildcats went to Mike Hinkle. Hinkle, normally the 'Cats starting right fielder, had not pitched for the Wildcats this season but went 15-4 last year at Kansas City Community College. He went the final three innings for K-State.

Vaught was pleased to see Hamacker finally spark some offense from his fifth position in the batting order. Hamacker brought a .189 batting average into the game, but Vaught refused to remove Hamacker from his spot in the order and it paid off as he went 3-for-5 at the plate against the Ichabods.

K-State brings a 14-11 record into tonight's 7 p.m. game with William Jewell at Frank Myers Field.

Embryo transfer is becoming an important part of registered-cattle operations in the United States. The process involves taking a fertilized embryo from a donor animal and transferring it to a surrogate mother for the rest of the gestation

The problem comes when untrained people, who aren't licensed veterinarians, get the products used for embryo transfer illegally.

"The products used in embryo direct supervision or on the order of a licensed veterinarian," said Dr. Mark Spire associate professor of surgery and medicine and codirector with Dr. David Carnahan, associate professor of surgery and medicine, of the Embryo Transfer Unit at K-State.

Untrained people performing embryo transfers results in injury or ruination of the reproductive ability of valuable cows.

Because of the attempts by many to guarantee and ensure their qualifications at embryo transfer, transfer are all to be used under the the American Embryo Transfer direct supervision or on the order of Association has established a certification program. The Embryo Transfer Unit at K-State recently became certified by the AETA.

"Certification is one way consumers can be assured of the quality, safety and disease-free status of purchased embryos. For owners of donor cows, certification verifies the qualifications of the people performing the transfers," Spire said.

The unit has four functions: to provide commercial services in the state; to provide research on embryo transfer; to conduct graduate and postgraduate training; and to provide a professional veterinary student education, he said.

Businesses or units take a test, and if required standards are met the unit or business can be certified, he

Thespians to perform 'Our Town'

By MARCIA SULLIVAN

Collegian Reporter

It's people - not places, that conceptualize Thornton Wilder's play "Our Town," said Lew Shelton, director and associate professor of theater. The K-State Players and the Department of Speech will present "Our Town" at 8 tonight in Nichols

The play takes place in the small town of Grover's Corner, New Hampshire. The story revolves around two families, their friends, and the simple happenings of everyday life.

Staged with very little scenery and few props, the play lends itself to a certain universality, Shelton said. The production is supposed to take place in a bare theater so the technicians have built a wall to cover the upstage seating in Nichols Theatre.

"One reason the play could be universal is it does not call for the specific material world most plays do," Shelton said. "Wilder gives the play a very specific setting and period, but doesn't call for the kind of detail we'd expect."

This production is different from others in that the physicalities of the show are small. Two sets of tables with chairs to create the illusion of homes, a bench and a trellis, serve as the entire scenery. The props consist of a pipe, a watch and a few umbrellas.

"The props for this show are simple and muted to compliment the concept that props in people's lives are not as important as the people themselves," said Tamara Holbert, graduate student in theater and stage manager/propmaster for "Our Town.'

Shelton said he thought Wilder was after a certain theatricality when he wrote the play in 1938.

"Playwrights were heavily into realism in the late '30s - creating a live picture on stage. Wilder was influenced by European drama which was more theatrical; he was trying to make an impact.

The members of the cast are required to pantomime most of the action. Shelton said the actors had a the prop, as well as the emotion. The majority of the pantomiming is done by the two mothers.

"It took a long time to get it down," said Brenda Roach, sophomore in general, who plays Mrs. Gibbs, "trying to grasp items that aren't there and at the same time trying not to think about them." Roach said she has taken an improvisational acting class that helped her with the pantomiming.

Shelton said technically the most difficult moment in the show is coordinating the recorded organ music to the direction of the church choir director, Miss Stimson.

"My cue to the sound technician is to raise my hand to begin directing the choir," said Jennifer Hays, of Miss Stimson.

"It is a pump organ, so the rhythm is different than a regular organ or piano," Hays said, "my fingers must

Debate to cover Japan's nuclear policy

By The Collegian Staff

Members of the K-State debate team and two Japanese students will discuss whether Japan should declare itself a nuclear free-zone. The debate is at 7 tonight in the Union Flint Hills room.

The debate is part of an exchange program sponsored by the national Speech Communication Association. The association selects outstanwith it would be more effective, Thompson said.

The remaining standing committee suggested by the group, University Committee on Communicable Diseases, would not be limited to AIDS but would be prepared to address any outbreak of disease on Committee members include representatives from Lafene, student and faculty senate, and the classified affairs committee; the directors of University housing and University Relations; a University attorney and the dean of students. A faculty adviser or student representative of the gay/lesbian student organization was added to the list.

The introduction explains the need for a University policy, based on current medical knowledge of the disease, to deal with the fear and apprehension that may arise on campus should a student, staff or faculty member be diagnosed as having AIDS or a related illness.

The policy goes on to discuss medical treatment, psychological services and counseling, participation in campus activities, employment and a standing committee. A separate set of recommendations deals with AIDS education.

Medical treatment will be handled by Lafene in a way that ensures confidentiality for patients with AIDS or AIDS Related Complex. Patients are encouraged to go to the same doctor each time they need treatment.

The Counseling Center and Lafene Mental Health will be able to provide psychological help and accurate information in confidence for individuals with a high risk of getting

Senate to elect ASK directors

By RENEE BEAUDOIN Collegian Reporter

Student Senate will vote on the establishment of the proposed Athletic Fee Task Force at its meeting at 7 tonight in the Union Big Eight room.

This task force would study the feasibility of a per semester student athletic fee which would help support non-revenue sports

Senate also will vote on approval of a new director and assistant director for Associated Students of Kansas.

Patty Hipsher, junior in political science, is being recommended for the position of ASK director. Matt Livingston, sophomore in pre-law, is being recommended for the post of ASK assistant director.

Senate will also vote on recommendations for appointments to Judicial Council, Traffic Appeals Board, Student Review Board, senate standing committee's at-large members, and a senate parlimentarian.

A constitutional revision for the College of Arts and Sciences will be heard by senate. It will also hear resolutions commending President Duane Acker for his work at K-State, and congratulating incoming President Jon Wefald.

Senate Executive Board is introducing its goals as a resolution to be passed by the body for the first Senate will hear more five-minute presentations from groups requesting funding through annual allocations. In the presentations groups will be able to explain organizational goals and intended uses for requested funds.

6th Fleet ends naval exercise

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The ships and planes of the 6th Fleet withdrew from the Gulf of Sidra off Libya's coast Thursday as President Reagan and other officials declared the United States had accomplished its mission of defending freedom of the

"The exercise is over," Reagan announced in early afternoon as he stopped in New Orleans for a speech en route to a California vacation.

"We have completed our exercise in the Gulf of Sidra and it was in every way a successful operation," Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger told reporters at the

"This exercise has demonstrated once again what it set out to do, which is our right and the right of all nations to operate in international waters. If Libya's radical claims and aggression against our forces were to go unanswered, no peaceful nation could safely rely on freedom of the seas anywhere.

The withdrawal came four days after the 6th Fleet began operations in the Gulf of Sidra and two days after Libyan forces gave up any pretense of further military challenge to the 30-ship battle group led by three aircraft carriers carrying about 250 planes.

The firing of surface-to-air missiles at American planes on Monday touched off U.S. attacks on the missile site and on Libyan patrol boats. At least two of the vessels were reported sunk.

No American casualties were United States had no estimate of Libyan losses.

Libyan strongman Moammar Khadafy acted rationally for a change in deciding to abandon military action against the U.S. forces, said Adm. William Crowe, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"Once we made it clear that we were determined to stay there and to demonstrate our rights, he withdrew his forces, and I consider that a very rational act," Crowe said.

Reagan charged that Khadafy was planning terrorist operations against Americans even before the confrontation in the gulf, and he pledged, "The United States will not be intimidated by new threats of terrorism against us...Mr. Khadafy reported, and Weinberger said the must know that we will hold him fully accountable for any such actions.'

Without being specific, he said, "We're aware of intensive Libyan preparations that were already under way for terrorist operations against Americans."

The president telephoned the 6th Fleet commander, Vice Adm. Frank B. Kelso, to praise the servicemen for their bravery and "tireless response to Libyan threats."

He told reporters as he left for an Easter vacation in California that he had "sent the fleet a well-done."

The withdrawal of the U.S. battle group began Thursday morning with a gradual reduction in the number of fighter flights over the gulf and orders to a cruiser and two destroyers inside the gulf to begin steaming northward.

Nicaraguan invasion lacking confirmation

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras -A U.S. Embassy spokesman said Thursday that about 1,500 Nicaraguan troops remained trapped in Honduras by U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels and that some have been taken prisoner.

But a spokesman for the rebels who earlier claimed his forces had surrounded the Nicaraguan troops said Thursday he could not confirm that either rebels or the troops were in Honduras. "We don't know anything," Dennis Perez, a spokesman for the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, the largest rebel group, told The Associated Press. "All the information we have on the matter comes from the government of Honduras and the government of the United States.

Honduran military sources have said up to 1,500 Nicaraguan soldiers entered the country Saturday in pursuit of the rebels, called Contras, but were trapped by them.

Nicaragua's Marxist Sandinista government denies its troops have crossed the rugged, illdefined border.

U.S. claims false credit, speaker says

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

Shock is the word Gene Stoltzfus uses to describe the U.S. government's contention that it is responsible for the overthrow of the Philippine government of Ferdinand Mar-

"I am absolutely shocked our government took credit for what happened. Their tanks were made in Detroit and those trucks were made in Detroit...the change came from the grass roots level," said Stoltzfus, a consultant for the American Friends Service Committee and a witness to Marcos' downfall, during a presentation Thursday at the Ecumenical Christian Ministries building.

Stoltzfus, who returned from the Philippines two weeks ago, discussed the chaos during the final days of the Marcos regime and described his interpretation of the "longawaited" exodus of Marcos on Feb. 25 and President Corazon Aquino's struggle to forma new government.

The historic change that has taken place during the past month in the Phillipines is a new beginning, but a stagnant economy, strong Communist insurgency and a factionalized military, will make it difficult for Aquino to build a consenus government, he said.

On Wednesday, Aquino imposed an interim constitution which abolishes the National Assembly, dominated by members of Marcos' New Society Movement, and gives Aquino sole lawmaking powers. The new constitution will permit Aquino to reform the corrupt legislative and judicial branches of government and begin to address claims of human rights abuses against

Legislative compromise collapses

Senate postpones lottery bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A legislative compromise on a proposed lottery amendment to the Kansas Constitution collapsed in the House Thursday afternoon, prompting the Senate to postpone action on the lottery measure and another constitutional amendment that would allow parimutuel gambling.

The lottery compromise was hammered out just hours before a number of House lottery backers withdrew support for the measure because of fears about when the question would be placed on the

As approved earlier in both chambers of the Legislature, the issue would be put to voters in the November general election. But the compromise language worked out between House and Senate negotiators Thursday would have placed the question on the August primary ballot.

House Speaker Mike Hayden said

"five or six" Republican lawmakers declared they would not vote for the compromise because of fears the lottery would cause problems during primary election campaigns for some House seats.

Although a number of Democratic legislators also expressed concerns about the timing, House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis said he believes no support had eroded on his side of the aisle.

The House approve the lottery by the required two-thirds majority, 84-41, on Tuesday without a single vote to spare. The same delicate coalition would have to be brought back together to give any compromise a mandatory two-thirds

"I think the votes are there for the agreement the conference committee made," Hayden said after the chamber voted 81-40 to send the measure back for more negotiations. "The only thing hanging it up is whether it should be on the primary or the general (election)."

Hayden said the action put the lottery question on hold until "at least Tuesday." Neither Hayden nor Barkis said they are concerned that some lawmakers may change their minds on the lottery after going home for the weekend.

The Senate tentatively approved the House's version of the parimutuel resolution on Wednesday. However, the Senate reconsidered its action on pari-mutuel after hearing that the House balked on the lottery compromise.

Included in the lottery compromise were changes that would have eliminated a provision in the House version that prohibits the state from advertising the lottery.

Members of the conference panel said the date of the public vote on the lottery was moved back from November to August because of a socalled sunset provision, which calls for the lottery to be discontinued in 1990 without the additional legislative approval.

Debaters argue free-zone merits

By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

Students from Japan and K-State argued whether Japan should declare itself a nuclear free zone in a debate Thursday.

The subject has been the topic of discussion this year in Japan and is one of two issues the Japanese team is debating while on tour in the United States. The tour is sponsored by the national Speech Communication Association. Every other year, the association selects two Japanese students to tour America. The association also selects U.S. debaters to tour Japan.

Ed Schiappa, director of debate, decided to break up both teams to "avoid a United States against Japan situation.'

Al Madrid, junior in Latin American studies, and Koichi Takei, senior in international law at Kitakyushu University in Kitakyushu City, argued the affirmative side, proposing Japan declare itself a nuclear free zone.

Lisa Iulianelli, senior in speech, and Satoru Aonuma, junior in English language studies at Dokkyo University in Tokyo, defended the status quo.

Madrid and Takei stated portions of the Japanese constitution and nonproliferation treaty which, according to Madrid, prohibit "possession, manufacturing and introduction of nuclear weapons in Japan." Takei said New Zealeand was justification for a free-zone policy in Japan. He said other nations would follow suit if Japan took the initiative.

"Japan should take the first step to eliminate the nuclear bomb in the free world," Takei said. "The cause of present danger (in Japan) is the presence of the American bomb. Eliminating this danger will get rid of our problems."

Iulianelli and Aonuma based their case on the threat of Soviet aggression.

"Japan will be conquered if the nuclear balance is shifted to the Soviet Union," Iulianelli said. "To cut off our transitory nuclear capabilities would give up our Soviet deterrent." Once the debate was finished.

however, all four students conceded Japan should declare itself a nuclear free zone.

"In debate we have to give up what we feel in our hearts,' Aonuma said.

Takei said the Japanese people believe Japan has disarmed, but he said they are also aware the government "allows passage of American nuclear warships in secret.' Even though many Japanese people support the disarmament proposal, they remain hesitant,

Takei said. "If we eliminate (nuclear arms) that may cause conflicts with America," he said. The controversy is also based around a fear of Communist aggression, the Japanese students said. Aonuma said most people are convinced if Japan supported a nuclear-free policy the Soviet Union would break the treaty. Takei and Aonuma do not agree.

Indian transport plane disappears

NEW DELHI, India - A sophisticated transport plane that India bought from the Soviet Union has disappeared on its first flight and is feared to have crashed, a Defense Ministry spokesman said Thurs-

It was the second Soviet-built Antonov-32 purchased by the Indian air force to disappear in flight in less than a week.

Defense Ministry spokesman A.K. Roy said the second plane disappeared Tuesday en route from the Soviet Union after a refueling stop in Muscat, capital of Oman on the Persian Gulf. Seven crew members were aboard, he said.

The ministry did not explain why it did not announce the plane was missing for two days.

A ministry news statement said air force and navy aircraft were searching the Arabian Sea off Oman for wreckage and any survivors.

The ministry said the AN-32 lost radio contact one hour and 17 minutes after taking off from Muscut on Tuesday afternoon. It was heading for the western Indian air base of Jamnagar.

Military parties are still searching in the snow-covered foothills of the Himalayas for another AN-32 that disappeared with 18 crew members on Saturday.

Engineers find problems with plane

TOKYO - A report released Thursday on last year's Japan Air Lines crash that killed 520 people said investigators found evidence that a rear bulkhead ruptured and shattered the jet's tailfin in flight. However, the 200-page report, released by the Transport Ministry's Aircraft Accident Investigation Commission, stopped short of offering conclusions on why the plane crashed. All but four of the 524 people aboard the jumbo jet died when the plane slammed into a mountain northwest of Tokyo on Aug. 12, 1985. The Boeing 747SR, on a one-hour flight from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to Osaka, lost most of its 30-foot vertical tailfin and all hydraulic controls before it crashed. The report said there were signs of metal fatigue in the debris of the dome-shaped aluminum bulkhead and other wreckage that indicated air suddenly rushed from the cabin through the bulkhead into Most of the tailfin would have been torn off, disabling the hydraulic controls and sending JAL 123 on its uncontrolled, 35-minute flight into the mountains.

The report said investigators discovered nicotine residue around two of about 30 rivets in a section of the bulkhead that Boeing Co. technicians repaired after the plane scraped its tail on a runway during a rough landing at Osaka in 1978.

An airline industry source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the stains indicate there may have been a slow leakage of pressurized air through the bulkhead for some time after the 1978 repairs.

Alaskan volcano spews ash 9 miles

ANCHORAGE, Alaska - Augustine Volcano began a pulsating eruption Thursday, pumping smoke and ash more than nine miles high and spreading it toward Alaska's major population center,

The 4,025-foot volcano, looming out of Cook Inlet on its own uninhabited island about 175 miles southwest of Anchorage, exploded early Thursday after weeks of steaming and stewing.

Fishing vessels, the Coast Guard and residents of the coastal community of Homer reported that the peak, quiet since its last eruption in 1976, thundered alive about 2 a.m., said Tom Miller, a U.S. Geological Survey vulcanologist.

"So far, it seems to be a relatively mild eruption," said state seismologist John Davies. "We expect this activity will continue for a few days. We really don't know."

Augustine hurled a column of corrosive ash and debris nine miles into the air, and prevailing winds carried the cloud north, turning a fresh blanket of snow brown. By late Thursday, the cloud was 150 miles long and about 30 miles wide, the Federal Aviation Administra-

By early afternoon, the first faint traces of ash were showing up in Anchorage. Authorities issued a health alert urging people to stay home and avoid exercise.

Trade deficit shows turn-around

WASHINGTON - The United States trade deficit fell to $12.5 billion last month, a dramatic 24 percent improvement over the January total as the country's oil bill declined sharply, the government said Thursday.

Analysts said the turn-around offered hope that the darkest days for U.S. trade are coming to an end, but they cautioned against reading too much into one month's numbers.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes hailed the new report as signaling "the start of a fairly steady decline in the trade deficit."

Speakes said the drop in the value of the dollar "is just now showing up in the trade figures and should help the trade picture at least

Senate passes welfare aid proposal

TOPEKA - The Kansas Senate on Thursday passed, 40-0, and sent to the governor a bill which protects 3,000 handicapped and mentally ill Kansans from losing their welfare checks.

For three consecutive years, Gov. John Carlin has proposed eliminating transitional general assistance, which is welfare aid for those 3,000 Kansans, as a means of saving $6.9 million.

But the Legislature continues to balk at the idea of casting adrift disadvantaged Kansans - even though they generally are transient, poor and have little impact in the voting booth.

The House restored the money to the welfare program and the Senate affirmed the decision. It now will be signed into law or vetoed

Also clearing the Senate Thursday were proposals to:

-Establish a voluntary hazardous waste collection program to provide the public and small businesses access to a safe disposal procedure. The bill now returns to the House for consideration of amend-

-Expand the powers of the insurance commissioner to exercise oversight and take control of insurance companies deemed to be in danger of insolvency. The bill has cleared the House and now ad-

-Give Kansas businesses and edge over out-of-state companies in bidding for state contracts. If an out-of-state company won a contract for goods or services that a Kansas business also bid on, the Kansas company would be given 72 hours to match the low bid. The bill advances to the House.

Robert Kruh, dean of the Graduate School, directs the formation of programs of study, examinations, language requirements, theses, dissertations and final examinations for the school's 3,500 graduate students.

Dean sees job as 2 roles

By SARAH KESSINGER Staff Writer

(Editor's note: This is the ninth in a series of stories about University deans. Tues-day's story will feature Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.)

Access to the entire range of University programs, departments and colleges provides a learning experience for Robert Kruh, dean of the Graduate School.

"I learn a lot because so many different things are happening here. Every day there's some new kind of development and it's exciting when one can have a hand in helping these things move forward," Kruh said.

The school now has 3,500 graduate students, with the most being in the College of Education. The Graduate School's office has two main responsibilities, Kruh said, one being the process from admissions to degrees.

"We work with all necessary steps in admissions with the formation of programs of study, examinations, language requirements, theses and dissertations and final examinations for all grad students," he said.

In August 1985 the school implemented testing for all graduate teaching assistants whose native language is not English. The testing, required by the Board of Regents, is standardized nationally.

Graduate council, an elected faculty group, reviews various policies that consider and approve all courses for graduate credit. The council also approves all faculty members in the school.

The second broad responsibility of the Graduate School is its research programs, Kruh said.

"Research is an integral part of the graduate program. Grad study is conducted by and large at the forefront of various fields. One must really explore that forefront," he said.

"Research is where you really learn about concrete structures, theories of economic growth, solid state devices and computers," Kruh said.

The Graduate School works with agriculture experimentation stations and the College of Engineering to help students and faculty members in pursuing their research programs and getting outside support for them, he said.

"The University as a whole has about $20 million of outside sponsorship of research. We're doing a lot of things to assist students, such as information for sources of support and proposals for grants," he said.

The Gramm-Rudman legislation will be cutting funds to those research programs provided for by the government, although it is unknown how serious the cuts will be, Kruh said. Also, graduate students with loans may soon feel the crunch from the bill.

At the University there are about 65 master's degree programs and 35 doctoral programs in "a very wide spec-trum of disciplines," Kruh said.

Most people - even those on campus - don't know the breadth of activities at the University, he said, citing the atomic fission lab, the Department of Interior Architecture's consistent winning of national honors, the more than $2 million in outside support for the Division of Biology from national health institutions and the Science Education Center in the education college.

"We have an impressive record here. KSU has so much expertise, so many able faculty members with specializations, it is a source of amazement," he Kruh came to the University in 1967 after being the dean of Arts and Sciences at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville. He said his work at K-State has been rewarding although he misses working directly with students in a classroom.

As far as advising students on the benefits of further study after an undergraduate degree, Kruh said the master's degree is to the bachelor's degree what the bachelor's degree was to the high-school diploma 30 years

"I would tell people who really want to move ahead in their careers that they should seriously consider grad

Director job attracts few candidates

Committee extends applicant deadline

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

The committee to select the new director of student financial assistance was not satisfied with the quantity of applications received, so it extended the deadline, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president of student and educational services.

Bosco, who is the director of the 11 member selection committee, said there were only 12 applicants. Robert Evans, the former director, has completed his job here and is working as director of student aid at Pennsylvania State University, University Park. The deadline for applications was originally set for March 21.

"The committee is just not satisfied with the quantity of applications which have been received," Bosco said.

The committee has decided to extend the deadline for applications to

'With more applications to choose from, the committee will be able to make the right decision on the selection for this position which does require a great deal of responsibility," Bosco said.

The committee is readvertising the position in the Chronicle for Higher Education and is contacting the financial aid directors of Big Eight and Big Ten schools.

Letters describing the position have been sent to more than 250 key women and minority leaders, Bosco said.

"We are hoping these steps which have been taken will help solicit more applications," he said.

The director of student financial assistance has primary supervision and responsibility for all student financial assistance programs at the University, Bosco said. The director operates as chief administrator for the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

The director handles $34 million in awards annually to approximately 60 percent of the student body. Duties of the director include budget preparation, record keeping, and reporting of funds.

The director is also responsible for the overall coordination of funding requests, submission of reports, fund management, development of policies and procedures for the Office of Student Financial Assistance. Bosco said the new advertisement for the position will include the new deadline and also the fact that the salary will be $36,000 to $40,000. The committee, which formed in mid-February, will try to have three candidates to recommend to William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, for the final selection by the first week in May, Bosco said.

Kansans should rally behind KU Jayhawks in Dallas this weekend would be a crowning achievement for any basketball team.

During the next few days many Kansans will be glued to their television screens as four outstanding college basketball teams battle it out for the national championship in Dallas.

The University of Kansas Jayhawks (35-3) will battle the Duke Blue Devils (36-2) Saturday in what some believe is a game between college's best. If recent history is to be a guide, the game should be packed with fireworks.

The Jayhawks and the Blue Devils have met before, on Dec. 1 in New York during the championship game of the preseason National Invitation Tournament

Winning the NCAA tournament in Madison Square Garden. Duke won that encounter 92-86.

> But that game is just one for the record books and trivia hounds. KU should concentrate on what lies ahead, not what happened nearly four months ago.

Even those people who don't care much for basketball (more specifically KU basketball) should cheer for the lone Kansas representative among the Final Four.

Only two victories stand between KU and a national championship. The Jayhawks have represented the state well and we hope they have the strength and ability to finish the season in winning fashion.

International students present week's events

Washington, D.C., concerning the federal budget, international funding issues frequently make the headlines. As a consequence of the annual political activity, students on campuses across the country become more aware and vocal about the United States' policies toward other nations such as Nicaragua.

In the midst of international controversies, including the conflict with Libya, K-State's International Coordinating Council has sponsored several events this week which have helped to increase student awareness of other countries and cultures as part of the activities of International Week.

The ICC has presented three tremendous films and charged no admission. The first, "El Norte," told the story of a Guatamalan family which fled the turmoil of Central America to find new lives in the United States. The second, "Yol," dealt with the pursuit of freedom by Turks. The last film, Every spring as tempers rise in which shows today, is "Kagamusha," a Japanese story.

Other events this week have included a fine trio concert, handicraft demonstrations and cultural exhibits.

These events have presented the campus with unique opportunities to view pieces of the world which cannot usually be seen from Manhattan. Some of the events have given students the opportunity to meet people from lands they have only dreamed of visiting.

The international students and International Week present tremendous resources for all to learn more about the world. As more people are learning to appreciate other cultures and the plights of people in foreign lands, a greater campus awareness of international issues is developing. This greater awareness may ultimately aid our political policies by encouraging greater tolerance of cultural differences. Steve Milligan, for the editorial board

State regents unable to support Washburn

The idea of admitting Washburn University to the Kansas Board of Regents system comes at a poor time considering the economic condition of the state.

The House Ways and Means Committee endorsed a proposal which would put Washburn under control of the regents effective July 1, 1988. The regents system includes six state universities and Kansas Technical Institution

Under the plan, local property tax support for Washburn would continue, however, the state would provide $2.5 million overall in fiscal years 1990 and 1991. This is in addition to the $5 million it currently provides to the univer- cuts. sity. The state would also be responsible for supplying funds to cover annual budget increases a projected $11 million by fiscal year 1992.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said state funding to the regents system is already inadequate and that adding Washburn to the regents would force universities to compete within the system for

In support of the proposal, Washburn students would be relieved of the large tuition increases. Washburn tuition is about $1,500 a year, and has doubled during the past five years. House Speaker Mike Hayden said the plan would improve the state's educational system and would eliminate competition between Washburn and regents institutions.

These points are valid - but not now - not when the state faces Gramm-Rudman budget

The addition of Washburn to the Board of Regents system must wait until the state can provide adequate funding for the institutions and programs for which it is already responsible.

Majors provide creativity, variety

To talk to some of my friends, you'd think I was pretty stupid.

See, I'm not majoring in engineering. To talk to most engineers, they're in the toughest major going. They have to work harder than anyone else, and they have to be smarter than anyone else.

I live with a whole bunch of engineers, and Lord, I have suffered. Most of it is goodnatured ribbing about how a dual degree in journalism and management is still easier than any one degree in the College of Engineering, but underlying all that, I fear, is the perception that, in fact, they are smarter and do work harder than the rest of

My father is an industrial engineer; my brother will be a mechanical engineer. Me, I don't know squat about fluid mechanics, Fourier transforms, electron theory or quantum mechanics, and I have no desire to ever plunder these mysteries. They're Greek to me, and will always remain so.

On the other hand, my dad, my brother and my best friend don't know diddly about Associated Press style, grammar, spelling, sentence construction, expository writing and could no more write a twice-weekly column than flap their arms and fly to the moon.

So who's dumber? No one - that's the point. I believe I may have finally convinced my fraternity brothers that one major is no more easier than another - they're just different.

Different, different, I can't draw a circuit to save my life, they can't write their way out of a paper bag, and none of us can operate on a sick animal, teach a classroom full of rug rats or argue before a court of law. Yet we need each other. We need engineers, architects, journalists, veterinarians, teachers, lawyers, coaches, actors and actresses, real estate salesmen everyone, in fact, with the possible exception of Moammar Khadafy.

I read a lot - five hours a day - and my friends think it's laziness. But for my occupation, it's part of my job to read what others write, how others write, what others think. If you read a lot, and become familiar with the elements of other writers' styles, you might notice that I draw on authors like Stephen

King, Charles Dickens, H.P. Lovecraft, Herman Wouk and many others, each of whom has had some influence on what has evolved (or de-evolved) as "Rich Harris' style of

Friday, March 28, 1986 - 4

The point is this: we know so little of what others do to live, thrive and survive. Richard Scarry, the children's author, wrote a big. happy book for toddlers called "What Do People Do All Day?" It might not be bad reading for some of us. Diversity is the key. A world of techno-geeks is no more or less attractive than a world of Luddites shivering in their boots at the merest hint of technology.

For crying out loud, people, we need each other, now more than ever. Narrow mindedness - and rest assured, it's equally prevalent on both sides of the fence - is no way to move ahead. This stupid, Neanderthal distrust of technology so many people have, that gets fed by disasters like the Hyatt Regency skywalks collapse or the Challenger tragedy, is like an anchor around the collective neck of mankind.

And the idea that creative minds are weaker than logical minds is equally inane. It's going to take all of us to reach the stars, my friends. And in truth, we're all alike. Some of us have chosen different career paths, but we all have logical centers, and we all have some spark of creativity. Let's keep that in mind.

Dieting ineffective without exercise

America has been dieting for 25 years and gained 10 pounds.

It should be obvious by now, because a dozen new diets have been appearing in books and magazines every day for the last 10 years, that something is fundamentally fishy. With the promotion of each new diet plan, individuals who are convinced they are overweight rush at the opportunity to throw more dollars at a pipe dream.

That the majority of Americans still believe diets work is a strong indication we are basically lazy.

The problem with fat burner plans is that they do not attack the real problem - how to stop gaining fat. Diets profess to do only one thing: to help the dieter lose weight.

According to Covert Bailey, author of "Fit or Fat," overweight is an obsolete term because there is a vast difference between being overweight and overfat. In fact, it is not realistic to determine how fat we are by frequent weigh-ins on the bathroom scale.

There are various means to determine how much fat an individual is carrying (one is the how-fast-you-can-sink-to-the-bottom-of-apool test) but the poundage is not important. What is important is the percentage fat makes up in relation to total body weight.

For example, a 512 foot, 285-pound man can have 2 percent body fat or a 512 foot, 94-pound female can have 25 percent body without seeming overweight.

On the average body fat hovers around 23 percent for males and 36 percent for females. These percentages are averages, not norms or recommended levels.

The sad conclusion is, most Americans are overfat - even the skinnies - and diets don't work, alone.

Now we return to the problem of laziness; exercise is not a popular cure for the overfat problem but it is the only method by which people can stop gaining fat and lose unneed-

Although few calories are actually burned during the exercise period, many diet books point out, the exercise itself changes our metabolic rate so we burn more calories throughout the day.

Exercising does not have to be a punishing experience, however. If it is, there is something wrong.

Doctors and exercise experts recommend doing aerobic exercise at 80 percent of an individual's maximum heart rate if there is no history of heart disease.

Aerobic exercise is meant to include not only aerobic dancing. It includes jogging, running, walking, cycling, swimming, crosscountry skiing, roller skating, ice-skating, jumping rope and various other activies. There are very few limits.

Bailey defines aerobic exercise as steady exercise or exercise that demands an uninterrupted output from the muscles for at least a 12-minute period. Tack on warm-up and cool-down periods and we have an exercise session lasting about 30 minutes.

One 30-minute session three days a week will maintain fitness, but it will take six days a week to improve fitness. Of course dieting is much easier because it is actually not doing something. Finding the time to exercise is not easy but there are more benefits than just losing fat.

More than 50 percent of deaths a year in America are directly related to cardiovascular unfitness. That is more than twice the number of deaths attributed to cancer. Most cardiovascular unfitness is attributed to the sedentary life of Americans. We can stop this trend if we care enough about our health.

Beginning an exercise program now and making it a part of our lives can reverse this terrible unnecessary death toll and help us individually to avoid health problems in later life related to being overfat and unfit. Ignoring our health from the outset is a costly and foolish mistake.

Defense of cadets

Editor,

This letter is in defense of those Army Reserve Officer Training Corps students who have been harassed on this campus as a result of United States Naval response to attack while on maneuvers in international waters off the coast of Libya

Many cadets, while wearing the battle dress uniform on Wednesday, were called "trespassers" and "war mongers" by their fellow students. We stress the fact that while we are members of the AROTC, we too are college students endeavoring to earn our degrees in our chosen fields. AROTC prepares us to be leaders in our society, planning to prevent wars, not to start them. While we are a part of the U.S. military, we are not directly related to or responsible for the actions of its other components, such as the

We have made a commitment to serve our country as needed. We are not here to be verbally abused by our peers for military actions beyond our control.

Thanks for safety

A week ago I was concerned with the safety of East Stadium. The problem was in the fact that the building did not have smoke detectors and was in violation of the state fire code for only having one exit. There are three classrooms in the speech department section that either have no windows or windows that don't open and one door which leads to the outside. After contacting the campus safety director, John P. Lambert, two smoke detectors and an additional fire exit were installed. I want to thank him for his concern and promptness in taking care of this matter. I am really proud to know there are school authorities who find the students' concerns of significance and are willing to take action.

Senate action forms task force to study proposed athletic fee

By RENEE BEAUDOIN Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill establishing a task force to study the feasibility of an athletic fee at its meeting last night in the Union Big Eight room.

The task force will consist of five senators, four at-large students and a Department of Intercollegiate Athletics representative as a non-voting, ex-officio member.

Cath Sayler, non-degree graduate student, proposed an amendment requiring nine student senators, one from each college, to be on this task force. The amendment failed.

"You've got to have a diverse group," Sayler said. "I'd like to have someone there, in that college, who can deal with questions as they crop up.

In a bill sponsored by Finance Committee, funds were requested from the Long Range Reserves for Capital Outlay account to purchase a computer, printer, monitor and software for the SGS Office. The cost of the proposed package is $3835.

The committee reported the computer was needed for wordprocessing, accounting and filing of past legislation. "I am opposed to this computer right now. We can't give more funds to some groups who really need them, and we haven't given any salary increases to these people telling them we have to tighten our belts," Sayler said. Senate also approved Patty Hipsher, junior in political science, as ASK campus director, and Matt Livingston, sophomore in pre-law, as ASK assistant campus director.

Senate passed a resolution congratulating and welcoming incoming K-State President Jon Wefald. Wefald will be on campus April 7

Senate also approved a number of students to fill at-large positions on standing committees, made several special appointments and approved a senate parlimentarian. Students were also named to serve as members of campus judicial boards.

Five-minute presentations from groups requesting funding through annual fee allocations continued. Groups heard by senate were: K-State Union; Students for Handicapped Concerns; International Coordinating Council: Consumer Relations Board; Sports Club Council; Coalition for Human Rights; Touchstone Magazine; Mexican American Council of Students; KSDB-FM; Women's Resource Center; Rec Services Council; University for Man; Black Student Union; Student Publications,

Senate action forms task force to study proposed athletic fee

By RENEE BEAUDOIN Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill establishing a task force to study the feasibility of an athletic fee at its meeting last night in the Union Big Eight room.

The task force will consist of five senators, four at-large students and a Department of Intercollegiate Athletics representative as a non-voting, ex-officio member.

Cath Sayler, non-degree graduate student, proposed an amendment requiring nine student senators, one from each college, to be on this task force. The amendment failed.

"You've got to have a diverse group," Sayler said. "I'd like to have someone there, in that college, who can deal with questions as they crop up."

In a bill sponsored by Finance Committee, funds were requested from the Long Range Reserves for Capital Outlay account to purchase a computer, printer, monitor and software for the SGS Office. The cost of the proposed package is $3835.

The committee reported the computer was needed for wordprocessing, accounting and filing of past legislation.

'I am opposed to this computer right now. We can't give more funds to some groups who really need them, and we haven't given any salary increases to these people telling them we have to tighten our belts," Sayler said.

Senate also approved Patty Hipsher, junior in political science, as ASK campus director, and Matt Livingston, sophomore in pre-law, as ASK assistant campus director. Senate passed a resolution congratulating and welcoming incoming K-State President Jon Wefald. Wefald will be on campus

Senate also approved a number of students to fill at-large positions on standing committees, made several special appointments and approved a senate parlimentarian. Students were also named to serve as members of campus judicial boards. Five-minute presentations from groups requesting funding through annual fee allocations continued. Groups heard by senate were: K-State Union; Students for Handicapped Concerns: International Coordinating Council; Consumer Relations Board: Sports Club Council; Coalition for Human Rights; Touchstone Magazine; Mexican American Council of Students; KSDB-FM; Women's Resource Center; Rec Services Council; University for Man; Black Student Union; Student Publications,

Music Review

Musicians collaborate to inspire moods

By LAURIE FAIRBURN Entertainment Editor

There are times when one's mood requires something different from music. A heat that doesn't make the body contort in synchopated rhythm; a melody clear of unpoetic verbiage. These are the times for the music of Ira Stein and Russel Walder.

The collaberation of Stein and Walder has resulted in Transit, a release that carries the listener on a journey of imagination and emotion so refreshing it feels like an escape. Stein and Walder have achieved a purity in their expression; allowing the listener the luxury to create senarios full of imagry, of texture and scent and motion. Each composition lies unconstricted by definition; rather, it is left to be interpreted, and the interpretation is subject to change each time it is listened to.

This purity is expressed artfully by Stein on synthesizers and piano, and by Walder on oboes and English horn. Although the extensive use of synthesizers and electronic percussion might hint at a mechanical sound (rather than the more human sound generated through traditional instruments) nothing could be less true.

"The Underground," the first track, begins hauntingly, but moves into a wide-open serenity, pacing itself with an easy blend of percussion and oboe, then bringing back the synthesizer to complete

The adding and subtracting of elements is characteristic of their sound. They are quite adept at finding the perfect blend of instruments, fading one out and adding another just at the right moment.

All eight tracks are delightful compositions. One of the most satisfying aspects of the release is that each piece is truly different from the rest, accomplished without the aid of lyrics to set them

Stein and Walder have gifted us with an extraordinary collection of songs. Songs with depth, energy. and, most of all - inspiration.

Education is important in understanding and preventing AIDS, said Jeff Martin, intern psychologist at Lafene Mental Health, during a Union Program Council Issues and Ideas lecture Thursday.

Martin, who spoke about "K-State: Facing the AIDS Dilemma," cited information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome from the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta and the American College Health Association.

Martin explained to a crowd of about 40 what AIDS is, how it can be contracted, who comprises the high risk groups, what the symptoms are and how the disease is treated and prevented.

"AIDS is a serious condition characterized by a defect in a person's natural immunity system," Martin said. "It is a virus.

A person may be infected with the Human T'lymphotropic virus type III and still not develop full-blown AIDS, Martin said.

"There's a long distance, in fact, between someone who's been infected with the virus and those who go on to develop the serious disease," he said.

The incubation time between contraction of the disease and the onset of active symptoms can vary, Martin said.

"The incubation period can be anywhere from six months to five years," he said.

Symptoms of the disease include tiredness, fever, diarrhea, night sweats, swollen glands and loss of appetite and weight, Martin said.

Martin also cited several groups which have a high risk of contracting AIDS. These include sexually active homosexual and bisexual men (73 percent), usually those with more than one partner; intravenous drug users who share needles (17 percent); those who have received an infected blood product through a transfusion (1 percent); heterosexuals who have sexual contact with homosexuals or bisexuals (1 percent); and infants who contract the disease in utero from an infected

Martin said contracting AIDS from an infected blood product is "currently not a problem" because a test to screen blood was developed about a year ago.

Martin said casual contact with an AIDS patient or people in the highrisk groups does not lead to contraction of the disease.

"The virus has been found in the saliva and tears of some patients," support that AIDS can be contracted in this way.

Martin said no one actually dies from AIDS per se, but rather from the inability of the body's immune system to fight opportunistic diseases such as Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, a parasitic infection of the lungs, and Kaposi's sarcoma, a type of cancer which usually occurs in undifferentiated spots on the surface of the skin or the mouth. Both diseases are fatal.

There is currently no vaccination or cure for AIDS, Martin said, although there is an HTLV-III antibody test which can tell a person who has been exposed to the virus if the antibody is in the blood.

"The reliability of this test has increased," Martin said. "But it doesn't tell whether someone is a carrier or whether someone will ultimately contract the disease."

Martin said the medical community centers on treatment of the opportunistic diseases because there is no vaccine or cure for AIDS itself.

Martin said prevention for AIDS includes screening of all blood products; education about what the disease is and how it is transmitted; cutting down on multiple sexual partners, "particularly if you don't know the sexual background of the part-

he said. "But there's no evidence to ner;" and not sharing needles with other drug users.

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, reviewed the AIDS guidelines policy set Wednesday by the University AIDS Committee.

Education techniques and guidelines to deal with possible AIDS cases were set by the committee, Nolting said, and a report will be issued next week detailing the policy.

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center and AIDS education subcommittee chairwoman, said education is "one of the biggest keys to the prevention and control of the disease.

She said the subcommittee had outlined several "target groups" on which to focus its education program. 'Our Town'

The year is 1901 as Timothy Smith, in his role as the stage manager, gives a tour of the quiet New Hampshire town of Grover's Corner and introduces its residents in the K-State Players production of "Our Town."

"Our Town" just might be our

Perhaps when writing this Pulitzer prize-winning play, Thornton Wilder attempted to create an atmosphere that could go beyond the stage.

The K-State Players and the Department of Speech have created their version of "Our Town" for Nichols Theatre. The show has 8 p.m. performances tonight, Saturday and April 1-5.

"The show could be one of the University's best-received productions because of its universality," said Lew Shelton, director and associate professor of theater. "Most people will come out of the show with a strong sense of nostalgia, even though they didn't experience life in the early 1900s," Shelton said.

Wilder takes the story of a town, concentrates on the rituals of everyday life, boils it down to one person -Emily Webb - and through her, teaches us about the essence of life.

The setting Wilder uses to illustrate "our town" is Grover's Corner, a small town in New Hampshire. We are introduced to the daily activities of two families - the Gibbs and the Webbs. Emily Webb, her brother Wally, George Gibbs and his sister Rebecca are introduced to the audience as the families are seen eating breakfast, preparing for an ordinary day. Nancy Sloan, senior in theater, said her role as Emily has been challenging because she has experienced some of the same feelings Emily does

"Emily isn't exactly the leading role, but you could call it 'her play' because she's the one who makes the discovery," Sloan said. "Emily is intense and wants attention desperately. I don't think kids today are much different - everyone feels at some time they are not getting enough attention, or that they are too busy to show how much they care about one another.'

Sloan said her character was easy to portray physically because she looks young. It hasn't been too long ago that she was where Emily is, "It's not like I'm ancient," she said.

Throughout the play, we are taken through Emily and George's life together. The audience witnesses a series of scenes representing daily life, love and marriage, and death. Wilder uses a character - the stage manager - to narrate and create an order to the scenes.

"The stage manager is like Rod Sterling of the 'Twilight Zone.' He's the type of character who is omniscient," said Tim Smith, graduate student in theater and portrayer of the stage manager.

Smith said the role is more difficult than most because the stage manager seldom interacts with the other characters, but rather is required to develop a relationship with the audience. "When you are acting with someone in a scene, there is a shared responsibility to respond to each other. The stage manager talks to the audience and it is difficult to establish a relationship without their verbal response," Smith said.

"The stage manager himself realizes the importance of everyday life and he wants to take the audience with him," Smith said. He said the play should go over well in Manhattan because it deals with love, values and traditions - things all of us sometimes take for granted.

Wilder has created several characters who could have walked right out of any small town in the 1900s. Some of the cast members found it was easy to give dimension to their roles because they could still, in 1986, draw upon people they know to simulate characteristics.

"Mrs. Webb is kind of a montage of women I know. A lot of her is my mother," said Jenny Langton, senior in theater. The two mothers in the play put their family before anything else and they should be admired for that, she said.

"Mrs. Webb is the kind of woman who does everything with a purpose, which corresponds to the career woman of today," Langton said. Brenda Roach, sophomore in general, who plays Mrs. Gibbs, said after being involved in the show she has come to appreciate life more. "Unfortunately it is not until someone dies that we think about life. We all move without thinking about

George Gibbs, played by Mark A. Cross, and Emily Webb, player strawberry soda and discover, in the words of the stage manage what it is we're actually doing," Roach said. The characters' concerns are concerns of everyday people, said Barry Pearson, graduate student in theater and creator of Doc Gibbs. Doc Gibbs is the local doctor of Grover's Corner. Pearson said to get a handle on his character, he started thinking about his hometown and the doctors

"Doc Gibbs is made for smalltown life. When I started thinking along those lines, I was able character who understor cerns of the people in a r Pearson said.

Shelton said the play wa ing to him as a director b textually it was different he has directed.

Education is important in understanding and preventing AIDS, said Jeff Martin, intern psychologist at Lafene Mental Health, during a Union Program Council Issues and Ideas lecture Thursday.

Martin, who spoke about "K-State: Facing the AIDS Dilemma," cited information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome from the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta and the American College Health Association.

Martin explained to a crowd of about 40 what AIDS is, how it can be contracted, who comprises the high risk groups, what the symptoms are and how the disease is treated and prevented.

"AIDS is a serious condition characterized by a defect in a person's natural immunity system," Martin said. "It is a virus.

A person may be infected with the Human T'lymphotropic virus type III and still not develop full-blown AIDS, Martin said.

"There's a long distance, in fact, between someone who's been infected with the virus and those who go on to develop the serious disease," he said.

The incubation time between con-

of active symptoms can vary, Martin

"The incubation period can be anywhere from six months to five years," he said.

Symptoms of the disease include tiredness, fever, diarrhea, night sweats, swollen glands and loss of appetite and weight, Martin said.

Martin also cited several groups which have a high risk of contracting AIDS. These include sexually active homosexual and bisexual men (73 percent), usually those with more than one partner; intravenous drug users who share needles (17 percent); those who have received an infected blood product through a transfusion (1 percent); heterosexuals who have sexual contact with homosexuals or bisexuals (1 percent); and infants who contract the disease in utero from an infected

Martin said contracting AIDS from an infected blood product is "currently not a problem" because a test to screen blood was developed about a year ago. Martin said casual contact with an AIDS patient or people in the highrisk groups does not lead to contraction of the disease.

"The virus has been found in the saliva and tears of some patients," support that AIDS can be contracted in this way.

Martin said no one actually dies from AIDS per se, but rather from the inability of the body's immune system to fight opportunistic diseases such as Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, a parasitic infection of the lungs, and Kaposi's sarcoma, a type of cancer which usually occurs in undifferentiated spots on the surface of the skin or the mouth. Both diseases are fatal.

There is currently no vaccination or cure for AIDS, Martin said, although there is an HTLV-III antibody test which can tell a person who has been exposed to the virus if the antibody is in the blood.

"The reliability of this test has increased," Martin said. "But it doesn't tell whether someone is a carrier or whether someone will ultimately contract the disease."

Martin said the medical community centers on treatment of the opportunistic diseases because there is no vaccine or cure for AIDS itself.

Martin said prevention for AIDS includes screening of all blood products; education about what the disease is and how it is transmitted; cutting down on multiple sexual partners, "particularly if you don't know the sexual background of the part-traction of the disease and the onset he said. "But there's no evidence to ner;" and not sharing needles with other drug users.

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, reviewed the AIDS guidelines policy set Wednesday by the University AIDS Committee.

Education techniques and guidelines to deal with possible AIDS cases were set by the committee, Nolting said, and a report will be issued next week detailing the policy.

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center and AIDS education subcommittee chairwoman, said education is "one of the biggest keys to the prevention and control of the disease.

She said the subcommittee had outlined several "target groups" on which to focus its education program. These include the University administration members; staff members at Lafene; residence hall and alternate living groups staff members; the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and recreational complexes staff members; faculty, students and staff members working in wet laboratories, such as in the Veterinary Medicine Complex; U-LearN; the FONE Crisis Center; the Division of Continuing Education; the International Student Center; University food handlers;

and the Manhattan Community.

Film Review

'Gung Ho' can't match expectations

By RICH HARRIS Collegian Columnist

Michael Keaton's latest effort, "Gung Ho," suffers from a plight affecting many films these days enormous build-up, embarrassing let-down.

The characterizations and performances are, for the most part, quite strong. Keaton is amusing as a wild-eyed manipulator, but it's a character he's played many times before, and it's beginning to wear thin.

There are some hysterical moments in the Ron Howarddirected film, especially when East meets West and cultures crash. In the opening sequence, as Keaton travels to Japan to make his pitch for a new Assan Motors plant to be opened in his hometown of Hadleyville, he takes the wrong Bullet Train, and we next see him hip-deep in a rice paddy asking directions

The pomposity of America's middle-management mindset is slyly lampooned in Keaton's presentation to a board of stonefaced Japanese executives. His slides of chesty babes bending over plant machinery are exactly what one would expect a two-bit manager to show his peers, and ohso-clearly the wrong move in faceconscious Japan.

Anyone with a smattering of Oriental culture will be at least amused by the way the film tapdances its way through stereotypes of the Japanese and the Americans. There is never any outrightly offensive depiction of either culture, but there are times when the film treads a fine line.

At the same time, there are some heavy-handed, but effective, examples of American xenophobia, especially the cross-cut scenes of Japanese management and American labor on a lunch break. As the Japanese deftly use their chopsticks and bowls, the Americans cruely mimic them. It's an ugly, but accurate, picture of the treatment some Americans offer "foreigners."

Additionally, the film hints at the Student Senate passed a bill establishing a task force to study the feasibility of an athletic fee at its meeting last night in the Union Big Eight room.

The task force will consist of five senators, four at-large students and a Department of Intercollegiate Athletics representative as a non-voting, ex-officio member.

perceived decline in the American work ethic, and the problems of foreign trade leaving American work and American workers in the dust. Some points the film raises are worth consideration, especially the idea that "almost is good enough." In today's world, it's not.

However, in the final analysis. the film is a disappointment for one reason - the motivations of many of the characters, especially the chief executive officer of Assan Motors, are not clear.

In the final scene, the CEO behaves in a manner diametrically opposed to his previous actions. While change is a part of any character, especially a nominal "bad guy gone good," it is believeable only when the reason for that change is clear. Unfortunately, it appears that some crucial element was cut.

Still, the film has some very funny moments, and is (perhaps unintentionally) an apt commentary on American reactions to foreign successes.

Education is important in understanding and preventing AIDS, said Jeff Martin, intern psychologist at Lafene Mental Health, during a Union Program Council Issues and Ideas lecture Thursday.

Martin, who spoke about "K-State: Facing the AIDS Dilemma," cited information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome from the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta and the American College Health Association.

Martin explained to a crowd of about 40 what AIDS is, how it can be contracted, who comprises the high risk groups, what the symptoms are and how the disease is treated and prevented.

"AIDS is a serious condition characterized by a defect in a person's natural immunity system," Martin said. "It is a virus."

A person may be infected with the Human T'lymphotropic virus type III and still not develop full-blown AIDS, Martin said.

"There's a long distance, in fact, between someone who's been infected with the virus and those who go on to develop the serious disease,"

The incubation time between contraction of the disease and the onset of active symptoms can vary, Martin said. "The incubation period can be anywhere from six months to five years," he said.

Symptoms of the disease include tiredness, fever, diarrhea, night sweats, swollen glands and loss of appetite and weight, Martin said.

Martin also cited several groups which have a high risk of contracting AIDS. These include sexually active homosexual and bisexual men (73 percent), usually those with more than one partner; intravenous drug users who share needles (17 percent); those who have received an infected blood product through a transfusion (1 percent); heterosexuals who have sexual contact with homosexuals or bisexuals (1 percent); and infants who contract the disease in utero from an infected

Martin said contracting AIDS from an infected blood product is "currently not a problem" because a test to screen blood was developed about

Martin said casual contact with an AIDS patient or people in the highrisk groups does not lead to contraction of the disease.

support that AIDS can be contracted in this way."

Martin said no one actually dies from AIDS per se, but rather from the inability of the body's immune system to fight opportunistic diseases such as Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, a parasitic infection of the lungs, and Kaposi's sarcoma, a type of cancer which usually occurs in undifferentiated spots on the surface of the skin or the mouth. Both diseases are fatal.

There is currently no vaccination or cure for AIDS, Martin said, although there is an HTLV-III antibody test which can tell a person who has been exposed to the virus if the antibody is in the blood.

"The reliability of this test has increased," Martin said. "But it doesn't tell whether someone is a carrier or whether someone will ultimately contract the disease."

Martin said the medical community centers on treatment of the opportunistic diseases because there is no vaccine or cure for AIDS itself.

Martin said prevention for AIDS includes screening of all blood products; education about what the disease is and how it is transmitted; cutting down on multiple sexual partners, "particularly if you don't know the sexual background of the part-

he said. "But there's no evidence to ner;" and not sharing needles with other drug users.

Earl Nolting, assistant vice president and dean of students, reviewed the AIDS guidelines policy set Wednesday by the University AIDS Committee.

Education techniques and guidelines to deal with possible AIDS cases were set by the committee, Nolting said, and a report will be issued next week detailing the policy.

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center and AIDS education subcommittee chairwoman, said education is "one of the biggest keys to the prevention and control of the disease.

She said the subcommittee had outlined several "target groups" on which to focus its education program. These include the University administration members; staff members at Lafene; residence hall and alternate living groups staff members; the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and recreational complexes staff members; faculty, students and staff members working in wet laboratories, such as in the Veterinary Medicine Complex; U-LearN; the FONE Crisis Center; the Division of Continuing Education: the International Student Center; University food handlers; and the Manhattan Community.

Senate action forms task force to study proposed athletic fee

By RENEE BEAUDOIN Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill establishing a task force to study the feasibility of an athletic fee at its meeting last night in the Union Big Eight room.

The task force will consist of five senators, four at-large students and a Department of Intercollegiate Athletics representative as a non-voting, ex-officio member.

Cath Sayler, non-degree graduate student, proposed an amendment requiring nine student senators, one from each college, to be on this task force. The amendment failed.

"You've got to have a diverse group," Sayler said. "I'd like to have someone there, in that college, who can deal with questions as they crop up.

In a bill sponsored by Finance Committee, funds were requested from the Long Range Reserves for Capital Outlay account to purchase a computer, printer, monitor and software for the SGS Office. The cost of the proposed package is $3835.

The committee reported the computer was needed for wordprocessing, accounting and filing of past legislation. "I am opposed to this computer right now. We can't give more funds to some groups who really need them, and we haven't given any salary increases to these people telling them we have to tighten our belts," Sayler said.

Senate also approved Patty Hipsher, junior in political science, as ASK campus director, and Matt Livingston, sophomore in pre-law, as ASK assistant campus director.

Senate passed a resolution congratulating and welcoming incoming K-State President Jon Wefald. Wefald will be on campus April 7.

Senate also approved a number of students to fill at-large positions on standing committees, made several special appointments and approved a senate parlimentarian. Students were also named to serve as members of campus judicial boards.

Five-minute presentations from groups requesting funding through annual fee allocations continued. Groups heard by senate were: K-State Union; Students for Handicapped Concerns: International Coordinating Council; Consumer Relations Board; Sports Club Council; Coalition for Human Rights; Touchstone Magazine; Mexican American Council of Students; KSDB-FM: Women's Resource Center; Rec Services Council; University for Man; Black Student Union; Student Publications, ommittee stops mandatory seat belt measure

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House Transportation Committee voted Thursday to kill a proposal that would establish a mandatory seat belt law in Kansas, after a number of committee members said the state should refrain from dictating how people should go about their lives.

"I happen to think people are smarter than government," said Rep. Jeff Freeman, R-Burlington, a committee member who was a primary opponent of the seat belt

After the panel voted 11-9 against sending the Senate-passed measure on to the House floor for debate, Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, the chairman of the committee, said he had no plans to consider a similar proposal before the Legislature adjourns in

However, Freeman said he does not consider the issue dead for the session and predicted seat belt supporters will return to tactics used last year, in which similar bills were channeled through the House budget panel or the Federal and State Affairs Committee. Freeman said the issue surfaced for debate on the House floor three times during the 1985 session.

Before the final vote Thursday, the committee approved two amendments aimed at reducing some objections to the bill. One change would have lowered the proposed fine for not wearing seat belts from $25 to $10, while another would have declared the Kansas law to be void if federal officials were to use the state's population in national quotas.

Crowell said he believes support eroded after the committee heard testimony last week from a Massachusetts woman, who claimed American automobile manufacturers are bankrolling a wellorganized campaign to get states to adopt mandatory seat belt laws.

Kathy Pappalardo, of Haverhill, Mass., who had worked as a lobbyist for mandatory seat belt laws, said auto companies were responding to a 1984 order by U.S. Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, which said auto makers would have to install air bags or passive restraints if seat belt laws are not passed by 1990 in states representing two-thirds of the nation's population. Another change the committee approved before killing the proposal would have extended the bill's terms to cover all pickup trucks weighing less than 12,000 pounds.

Crowell made a last-ditch appeal for votes, saying nearly everyone in the Legislature would vote for almost any measure if it were guaranteed to save lives.

Alumni to help in recruiting effort

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Alumni Association is using a new concept in new student recruitment, said Larry Weigel, executive director of the association.

Weigel said the association has been working to identify alumni in the Kansas City area who are willing to contact high school students expressing interest in K-State.

Two volunteer groups, which have already been established and are in their first year of operation, give alumni and their spouses a chance to help in the recruitment effort.

The first group sponsors a series of career nights for prospective students. Alumni who are now professionals meet with high-school students to talk about their careers, Weigel said.

The group conducted eight career nights last year, two in Kansas City and six in other cities in the state.

About 80 percent of the students who attend career nights enroll at K-State the following fall, he said.

The second group of volunteers telephone students who have been admitted or are thinking of applying to K-State. They tell the students about their experiences at the University and answer questions, Weigel said.

This type of personalized follow-up is new, he said. Even though the Admissions Office uses direct mail and follow-up letters, it is impossible for these means to provide personalized Weigel said due to declining enrollment, the time has come to reac to the alumni to ask for their help. The association is currently organizing the alumni and getting them involved in local chapters.

He said alumni want to help and they feel good about this role. "It's a very logical relationship," Weigel said.

'Cats better record with 17-9 crushing of William Jewell

By DOUG SCHEIBE Sports Writer

It was a rough night for William Jewell second baseman Tim Atchity. Atchity committed five errors and hit into a triple play as K-State defeated William Jewell, 17-9, Thursday night at Frank Myers Field.

Atchity wasn't the only person having a tough time with the glove. It was a rough night for both teams defensively as K-State committed six errors and William Jewell had nine total errors.

"They made errors, but we hit the ball well, which caused some of them (the errors), and we hustled down the (base) line well," K-State Coach Gary Vaught said. "We had two or three errors that I wouldn't have given (errors)." The triple play was one of the game's highlights. With men on first and third in the third inning, Atchity grounded to K-State pitcher Wally Bramlage. Bramlage threw to first for the first out as the runner from first advanced to second. First baseman Otto Kaifes then threw to second baseman Brent Gibson, who tagged the runner rounding second. Gibson then caught the runner off third base, ran him towards home plate and threw to Kaifes who had come in to cover. Kaifes made the tag for the third out.

"That was the first time as a player or a coach that I had seen a triple play," Vaught said. "I got all excited. I didn't know if we made four outs or just what happened."

Offensively, K-State added nine hits to the William Jewell errors. The Wildcats were led by Kaifes and third baseman Jim Donohue.

Kaifes went 2-for-4 with a sacrifice fly and five RBIs. Donohue had a walk and three hits including his second home run of the season in the fourth inning. Donohue had four Bramlage, 2-0, got the win for K-State. He went 63/3 innings giving up seven runs, six earned, and allowing 12 hits.

"Wally hadn't pitched in 15 days," Vaught said. "He got the ball up (in the strike zone), but he wasn't walking many (batters)."

K-State's record is 15-10 going into the Big Eight Conference season.

The Wildcats' first conference game is Saturday at noon against Nebraska in Lincoln.

"You should try to play .500 on the road and go 3-1 at home in the conference," Vaught said.

"Our hitting is coming around," Vaught said. "I think we're starting to turn the corner. I think the night game (against William Jewell) helped us. We've got to go out and have a good practice tomorrow and we'll be ready to go to Nebraska."

Rocky Ferguson, Scott Lichlyter, Robbie Guinn and Tom Smith are scheduled to start for K-State.

Poor decisions

Sports Editor,

As a two-year letterman on the K-State varsity tennis team, I feel qualified to comment on the coaching of Steve Bietau and the recent dismissal of Kris James and Scott Chandler from the men's tennis

In regard to Bietau's coaching ability, I feel that he was immature against players based solely upon his own personal feelings. He had no set coaching standards and he was very unpredictable in his manners at practice. He would frequently tell his players one thing and then do the op-

Green opts to transfer after year

By JEFF TUTTLE Collegian Reporter

Benny Green, freshman point guard for the men's basketball team, said he will transfer to another school at the conclusion of this

According to a published report, Green made the decision to transfer due to the resignation of Jack Hartman and not the hiring of new head coach Lon Kruger.

The Wichita Eagle and Beacon reported Thursday that Green came to K-State because of Hartman and that Hartman's resignation was a shock to Green.

If Green decides to enroll at a major college he will have to sit out a year, but if he attends a junior college he can begin to play immediately. The report said Green has not decided where he will attend school.

Green, who averaged 7.8 points a game and led the team in assists with 88, will leave a hole in the K-State backcourt but will open up another scholarship for Lon Kruger to fill before the national signing date of April 9.

Green came to K-State from North Little Rock, Ark., where he earned several post-season honors after his senior year, including the state's Most Valuable Player award.

He was recruited by nearly every major college in the country, but chose K-State over the likes of Georgetown, Nevada-Las Vegas and Indiana because of Hartman's ability to turn out great guards such as Rolando Blackman, Mike Evans and Chuckie Williams.

Green said he told Hartman before the final game of the season at the Big Eight Tournament he would be transfering.

The report stated Green had second thoughts about leaving when Georgia Tech assistant coach George Felton was in the running for the head coaching job at K-State because of Felton's reputation as a good recruiter.

He said he believed Felton had an advantage over Kruger because of his recruiting ties, but said his decision was not based on anything per-

'Twerp' Skiles should have been behind bars, not on court

I don't watch sports much. A little golf, a little football - well, actually, a lot of football, because my fraternity brothers don't leave me much choice - and a little Formula One, CART or Can-Am auto racing

But lately I've been getting into the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball tournament. I've got a few questions about the whole thing.

First, why was Michigan State's Scott Skiles allowed on the court? Aside from being an obnoxious little twerp, he's a convicted criminal. While on probation for a drug possession conviction, he was arrested twice for driving while intoxicated. What's the deal? How does this guy rate a deferment of his prison sentence until after the NCAA tournament is over?

I can't fathom this at all. The man was arrested on two separate occasions for DUI after he was convicted of possession. Yet he's a free man for as long as it took to play in the tournament. Where's the justice in that? If I got arrested, do you suppose I could get a deferment until after I had written next week's column? Folks, this is horse crap. The man belonged in jail immediately, basketball or no. I'm frankly surprised there wasn't any more uproar about this I was pleased to see Michigan State get pummeled by Kansas in overtime - I figure the university, as well as the NCAA, the team and the criminal justice system all had a part in this travesty, and Michigan State had no business getting as far as they did. Now about this Kansas team. We all know our sister university's basketball team has gotten a lot of breaks here of late, especially in the Kansas-Michigan State game. But, in the words of a friend, "Ya gotta love 'em." For the first time in my life, I'm rooting for the 'Hawks. The fact that I have a substantial sum of money riding on the Jayhawks to go all the way might have a little to do with it, but, nevertheless, "Go Hawks!"

What is it about sports? In the narrow view, it's grown men playing children's games for money. On the other hand, it's a chance to observe the human animal at one of its most graceful moments. There is a lot to be said about the absurdly high sums professional athletes are paid, most of it justifiably negative. The biggest point is, or ought to be, that sport is ignored for the sake of the entertainment value. Sport for the sake of sport suffers when people allow athletes to become "superstars."

Hey, look, Mary Lou Retton is a fine gymnast, but there ain't no way I'm gonna buy Wheaties because she said so.

Dr. J is pitching fried chicken, Mary Lou is selling everything from batteries to Big Macs, Arnold Palmer hawks gasoline and motor oil, and Bob Uecker sells lite beer. OK, so I'd by beer from Bob Uecker, but because the ads are good, not because Bob says to. The rest of the advertising built around athletes, frankly, stinks. As an advertising major, I know whereof I speak.

So what's becoming of sports? Even the Olympics, once sacrosanct, now provide fodder for the great marketing mill. Thanks, Mary Lou, for helping to profane one of the last bastions of pure athletic competition...America's newest bundle of repulsion.

'Cats trying to get Coleman reinstated

Like I say, I'm not much into sports. But I like the spirit of the games, and I like the honesty of the competition. Unfortunately, even that has been sullied lately. Closet fans like me are being turned off in increasing numbers by the prostitution of collegiate and professional athletics.

Like a lot of people who don't pay much attention to a topic except on rare occasions, I don't know much sports, but I know what I like. And I don't like the merchandizing, the fixing, the bending of rules so pipsqueaks like Skiles can get away with what could have been murder. What if he'd killed someone while he was polluted? Could he still have played?

Give me back the good ol' days - pure competition for the sake of it.

Crew team to hold own regatta

The K-State crew team will compete against Washburn Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir in the Founder's Regatta.

This will be K-State's second meet of the year, as they competed in the Heart of Texas Regatta over spring break. At that meet four of the five crews placed third among nine other competing schools. The regatta will feature five races beginning at 11 a.m. with varsity four. At 11:30 the mixed eight (four men and four women) will compete, and at 12:15 p.m. the freshman eight men's crew will compete. At 1:15 p.m. the women's varsity will compete, and at 2 p.m.

the men's varsity eight will hit the water. "Washburn is an improved team over last year," K-State crew team coach Don Rose said. "But K-State is much improved also." According to Rose, the best place to watch the race is from the finish line, which is located north of the dam on the east side of the lake at the observation point.

K-State's men and women's tennis teams will host Missouri this morning at 9 at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Complex courts.

Missouri is not officially in the Big Eight Conference this season. The Tigers are participating as a club team this season and plan to enter the conference next year on the varsity level.

'We normally wouldn't play a club team," Coach Steve Bietau said. "But because it is Missouri and they are coming back into the conference, we agreed."

K-State's women will also host Wichita State on Saturday starting at 2 p.m. at the L.P. Washburn courts.

Wichita State beat K-State, 5-1, in the singles portion of a dual last fall. The doubles portion of that dual was rained out.

K-State's athletic department still isn't ready to give up on the chance that star basketball player Norris Coleman's eligibility might possibly be restored.

According to Athletic Director Larry Travis, Assistant Athletic Director Lee Moon will travel to Jacksonville, Fla., early next week to talk to officials there about Coleman's high school grades.

The 6-foot-8, all-Big Eight forward was ruled ineligible by K-State Feb. 28 due to a discrepancy about his high school transcript.

It was found that Coleman had a

1.97 grade point average in grades However, at the time Coleman at-10, 11 and 12. A 2.0 GPA is required by the National Collegiate Athletic Association for an athlete to be eligible for financial aid.

"We just want to put all the facts together," Travis said. One of the people Moon will speak with on his visit to Jacksonville will be Duvall County Superintendent of Schools Herbert Sang.

"I think what they (K-State athletic officials) are wanting to do is look at what the record really shows," Sang said in a telephone interview with the Collegian.

K-State used a four-year (grades nine, 10, 11 and 12) transcript to figure Coleman's eligibility.

tended high school (he graduated in 1981), the three-year transcript was the prevailing method of figuring eligibility for financial aid, thus the discrepancy.

Sang said he believed Coleman was being treated unfairly and should be allowed by the NCAA to

'My position would be if they're going to look at it on a technicality, I don't see that it makes any difference," he said. "If they use a technicality, the young man (Coleman) ought to be given credit."

Sang said Coleman completed the 15 credits (in grades 10-12) required for graduation with a cumulative sion, we will," Travis said.

GPA above 2.0, and also the 16th and 17th credits with above a 2.0. But is was the 18th credit, one he failed, that did Coleman in.

"The requirement was 15 credits. He successfully completed 17 credits - two more than was needed. If the 17 credits or 15 credits were taken into consideration, he (Coleman) had over a 2.0 average. It was only the 18th credit that he failed," Sang said.

"It seems to me they ought to count the 15 credits...I think he qualifies."

K-State will appeal the Coleman case to the NCAA sometime in April. "If we have to take him (Sang) to

Jayhawks' Kellogg loves to play on Saturdays

By The Associated Press

DALLAS - Kansas' Ron Kellogg is known as "Mr. Saturday" to fans and teammates because all six of his 30-point scoring performances have been on that day of the week.

Kellogg, despite a painfully sprained arch on his left foot, is hoping to add to his weekend showcase performances this Saturday against Duke in the semifinals of the NCAA basketball tournament at Reunion Arena. "If he can't start, he'll pick the starting lineup," Kansas Coach Larry Brown said Thursday. "I think he knows that Archie (Marshall) is the one who goes in for him.

Brown said a decision hasn't been made on which will start.

"If Archie has to start we'll be in trouble, but not because Archie is starting," Brown said. "It will mean that our depth is less. I think (Kellogg) will play but he'll be less than 100 percent.

Kellogg, who is second in scoring at 11.2 per game and in assists at 3.2, suffered the foot injury March 8 against Oklahoma in the semifinals of the Big Eight Conference tourna-

Brown said Kellogg worked out lightly Thursday with the Jayhawks at Moody Coliseum on the Southern Methodist University campus.

Kellogg has continued to play despite the injury.

Following a victory over Temple in the second round of the NCAA playoffs, swelling caused concern that the senior from Omaha, Neb., would not be able to continue.

In the Midwest Regionals, Kellogg's foot held up for victories over Michigan State and North Carolina State as Kansas advanced to the Final Four.

Golf team opens year with wins

By RON RENO Collegian Reporter

The men's golf team began the season on a winning note with a triumph in the Kansas State Triangular Thursday at Rolling Meadows Golf Course near Junction

K-State finished with a four-man total of 319 on the par-72 course. Fort Hays State placed second with a total of 328 and was followed by Washburn

K-State was led by senior Jack Day who shot a 77. Freshman Daran Neuschafer followed with an 80, and seniors Jim Fiscella and K.C. Byrne both turned in scores of 81.

The medalist for the tournament was junior Paul Sivesind of Fort Hays State, who ended with a 75.

Coach Ray Wauthier was pleased with the team's performance in its initial outing this spring. He said the golf course was a little rough because it had been worked on recently, and this caused scores to be a little higher than normal.

"That ball bounces crazy as hell," Wauthier said during the tourna-

Wauthier, who is retiring this spring after 37 years of coaching at the University, said he is relying on seniors Fiscella and Day to lead the team. Both are in their fourth year of competition for the University while the rest of the players are newcomers to the program.

"They have both been hitting the ball pretty good this spring, so I expect some pretty good things out of them," Wauthier said.

Wauthier said, realistically speaking, one of his goals for the team is to edge out Nebraska and Iowa State for sixth place in the Big Eight. He said the conference, which placed four schools in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament last year, is one of the toughest in the nation.

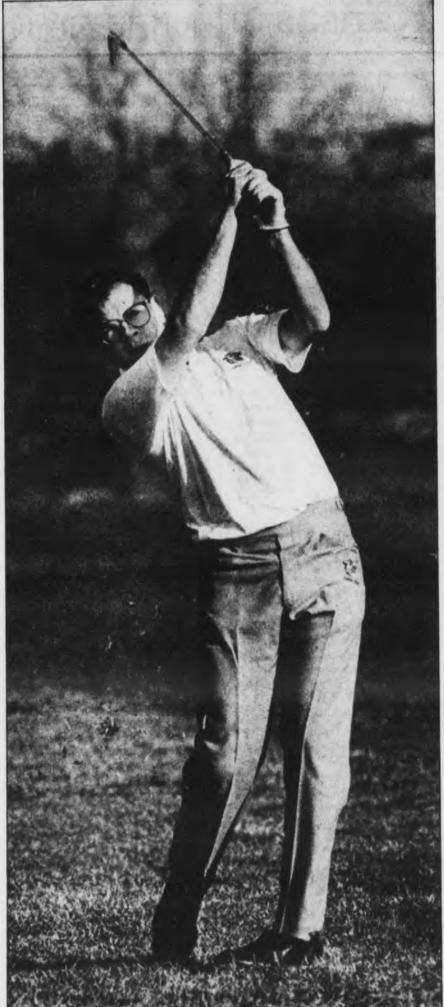

He also said he hoped the team would repeat last year's performance by winning both the Baker Tournament and the Heart of America Tournament later in the

The Heart of America Tournament is scheduled for April 18-19 at Warrensburg, Mo. The Baker Tournament will be played April 15 at the Alvaniar Golf Club in Lawrence.

Florida meet next for K-State

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

One thing is for certain about the K-State track and field teams: they certainly aren't shying away from tough competition.

After scoring well in last week's Paper Tiger Invitational at Baton Rouge, La., the team will go south again this week to compete in the Florida Relays at Gainesville.

The competition in Florida may be the most difficult the team faces until the season-ending National Collegiate Athletics Association outdoor meet at Indianapolis.

"Florida is a great meet, a meet Southeastern and Southwest Conference schools, but you get all the Eastern schools, too," Coach Steve Miller said.

While Miller is bringing most of his top performers to Florida, Miller will not be running some of his best athletes in their specialties.

Chris Vanatta and Jacque Struckhoff, who finished one-two in the 5,000 meters in the Paper Tiger, will both be competing in the 10,000 meters this week. Neither Vanatta or Struckhoff has run the 10,000 in a meet before.

"If they (Vanatta and Struckhoff) could qualify for the 10,000 in this where you not only get all the meet, great, then we won't be forced to work them so hard until the Big Eight meet," Miller said.

In another move, Anne Stadler, a winner in the Paper Tiger at 1,500 meters, will compete in the 3,000 meters this week In men's competition, NCAA indoor long jump champion Kenny Harrison will compete outdoors for the first time this season.

"There's going to be some big names there," Miller said about the long jump field. "I don't think Carl Lewis (1984 Olympic champion) is going to be there, but Larry Myricks (No. 2 jumper in the world in 1985) is liable to be there.

'Cats to meet NU in 4-game series

By TIM FITZGERALD

Assistant Sports Editor The K-State baseball team's "first season" season is now over, and Gary Vaught says he feels good about his squad as the team enters the Big Eight Conference season.

The Wildcats travel to Lincoln, Neb., this weekend with a 15-10 record to face the Nebraska Cornhuskers in double headers both Saturday and Sunday to open what Vaught calls K-State's "second Vaught labels his team's early season road trip through the South as succesful and his team's inconsistent play during the recent home stand as only temporary.

"If you're not playing good and you're still playing above .500, you're a good ball club," Vaught said. Vaught doesn't have unreasonable hopes about his team's series with the Corhuskers - he would be satisfied if K-State left Lincoln with a series split.

"You always want to win all of them, but a coach wants to be 2-2 on the road and 3-1 at home in the Big Eight. (If we do that) we're going to have a chance to win the Big Eight," Vaught said.

The Cornhusker team, despite its early record, is Vaught's pre-season choice to claim the Big Eight title.

"We've got an edge on Nebraska in one way - I think we've played better competition than they have. I think right now they're 9-7. I think the kids are going to respond to the challenge," Vaught said.

Vaught has talked with his team about their inconsistency during the past home stand, and he said his team responded with enthusiasm.

"I've challenged the kids to be the best team K-State has ever had. I think we're ready. It's going to be a different game at Nebraska. They have a turf infield and we're a good turf team," Vaught said.

Despite the number of games his team has played recently, he is not worried about the Wildcat pitching staff being tired going into the Big Eight schedule.

'Maybe we'll break out of this thing. We had good hitting the other night and I know our pitching will come around. We've had good pitching all year long except for two or three outings," Vaught said.

Vaught said there is nothing that can be done now, but he could very easily see his team taking a much better record to Nebraska

"I think right now we could be 20-5. I think it's going to be a great series," Vaught said.

K-State profiting from tournament

By JEFF TUTTLE Collegian Reporter

Although K-State did not get an invitation to the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball tournament, they will receive one-eighth of the total amount of money that Big Eight Conference schools, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Iowa State get for participating in the tournament.

"The money will be put to good use because we are losing our Big Eight television contract with KATZ television network, because TV money is down," Athletic Director Larry Travis said. "We will not get the money until October, and at that time it will go into the general operations budget of the athletic department each participating school made $167,000 per game, which totaled $835,000. That amount is divided between all eight teams in the conference with K-State getting $104,375.

Missouri and Nebraska were defeated in the first round, but Iowa State, Kansas and Oklahoma advanced by winning first-round games. So for playing in the second round these three schools received $167,000 each for a total of $501,000. The $501,000 will be divided among the eight conference schools at $62,625 each.

Oklahoma was defeated in the second round. KU and Iowa State advanced to the third round with second round victories, so they collected another $167,000 each for advancing for a total of $334,000, which divided eight ways is $41,750 for each

KU won its semifinal round (third round game) to advance to the finals of the Midwest regional, but Iowa State was defeated and eliminated from that same regional in the semifinals. The Jayhawks collected another $167,000 for playing in the regional finals, so each conference team received $20,875.

Since KU advanced to the Final Four in Dallas, they will collect another $167,000, whether they advance to the final game or not, so each conference team will collect another $20,875.

All totaled, the Big Eight by sending five schools to the NCAA tournament, will receive about 2 million for its member schools.

That means that each school in the conference will receive about $251,000.

"We Sell More Than Just Textbooks." By PENNIE BRENEMAN Collegian Reporter

Tonight marks the opening of the 1986 Miss Kansas Pageant, but for six K-State students, it marks the end of a long preparation process.

The pageant will be at the Wichita Hilton Inn East, Wichita, tonight through Sunday.

Yolanda Corrales, junior in political science; Jonna Keller, junior in graphic design; Tisha Pope, freshman in marketing; Mary Overmyer, junior in administration recreation; Angie Schumaker, junior in secondary education; and Myrna James, junior in English; are this year's delegates from K-State.

"I am nervous about the pageant and don't know what to expect. I have never participated in anything like this before and thought it would be a good experience and a lot of fun," Pope said.

The delegates have been busy for weeks preparing for the pageant and are now anxiously awaiting the com-

"I have contacted all my sponsors and everything is ready. Now I am just taking it one day at a time,"

"Getting invited to participate in the pageant was not something I expected," Schumaker said. "I'm excited, but I'm not concerned about winning. When you set your sights on winning, you lose track of everything

Each delegate, with the help of two "angel delegates," is responsible for raising a support fee to cover the entire cost of her participation. The $475 support fee pays for the delegate's food, lodging, gifts, prizes, production of the pageant shows, special events and entertainment.

The "angel delegates" are selected by the Miss Kansas delegates. The support fee may be obtained by one supporter contributing the full amount or by a number of supporters' contributions.

In order to be invited to participate in the pageant, the delegates were first nominated by high schools, college campuses and businesses, said Monika Hamilton, regional staff consultant for the pageant.

Next interviews were conducted with the women and invitations were extended to those who were selected. Approximately 80 women will be participating in the pageant and will come from major universities in Kansas, she said.

"It's an offer that is too good to be true, and one that I couldn't turn down," James said.

The delegates have collected their support fees and coordinated their outfits and now all that is left is anticipation.

"I have been tanning, watching what I eat and exercising to keep fit. Participating in the pageant is so exciting and is the chance of a lifetime for me. I can't wait," Corrales said.

"I hope to gain a lot of new friends. It's a short time but a neat way to get to know people," Overmyer said.

"The first night of the pageant we will have a '50s party that will be just for the contestants," Hamilton said. "We like the girls to be with each other and the staff without any outside contact."

The second day is the swimsuit ballot and personal interview.

"Later that day a personal interview is given with each candidate in order for the judges to get to know the girls and their personalities," Hamilton said.

Sunday at 3 p.m. is the final show which will be open to the public. At this time there is an evening gown review where the top 10 to 12 candidates will be chosen. Each of these candidates will then appear in a swimsuit and will make a personal statement, anything they choose to say, Hamilton said.

The Miss Kansas USA 1986 Queen will be crowned Sunday evening and will go on to represent the state of Kansas in the Miss USA Pageant, which is the CBS live telecast hosted by Bob Barker, Hamilton said.

Miss Kansas will receive an allexpense paid trip to Miami Beach, Fla., the site of the Miss USA Pageant. The trip will last three weeks and includes airfare, hotel, meals and $200 cash.

She will also receive a banner decorated with 1,900@ Austrian cut rhinestones, a trophy, a designer evening gown, make-up analysis and make-up supplies, a modeling course valued at $1,500, rehearsal and interview clothes and any state costumes she will wear on the USA telecast.

The Miss USA Pageant will be May 21, and the winner of the pageant will go on to compete in the Miss Universe Pageant that will take place later in the season.

Students express support, envy for Jayhawks

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

Most students surveyed in the K-State Union Thursday said they supported the University of Kansas' quest for the national championship, although a few said they wouldn't root for the Jayhawks

Much hoopla surrounds the Jayhawks bid for the championship and their game against top-ranked Duke University in the first round of the NCAA Final Four Saturday in

Some K-State students said they are a bit envious of their rivals down

"I'm happy for them," said Gary White, junior in economics. "Wish I went to KU.'

Some students said they supported KU because the Jayhawks represented the entire state and the Big Eight Conference.

"I think it's just great," said Mohammad Farzam, senior in electrical engineering. "It's about time that the Big Eight had a representative in the NCAA (National Collegiate Athletics Association) Final Four.

"I'm really glad to see it, I think it would be good for the state," said Jeff Gale, senior in natural resource there and represent us well."

"I think it's great," said Kassaya Seyoum, senior in civil engineering. "I think they deserve it because they've been working hard and they have a great coach.

"I think KU has been doing a pretty good job, and have worked relentlessly for this moment," said Lambert Eigbedion, graduate student in business administration.

"It's good for Kansas. It puts Kansas on the map," said Mel Ptacek, junior in arts and sciences.

"I don't ever support KU under any circumstances, but they're going to win," said Kevin Terzaghi, senior

One student said he believed K-State needs more support from alumni in order to keep up with KU.

"I think it speaks a lot for the University of Kansas' commitment to successful sports teams," said Steve Pretz, senior in animal sciences and industry.

One student said she is a true K-Stater and doesn't like the Jayhawks even if they are representing Kansas and the Big Eight.

"I don't like KU," said Dana Greier, junior in civil engineering. "I feel they have a good chance to win, but deep down, being a true K-Stater, I hope they don't.'

By BECKY LUCAS Collegian Reporter

The Board of Education for Unified School District 383 acted with what Superintendent Hal Rowe described as "cautious optimism" when accepting a comprehensive computer program he presented recently.

The program calls for the implementation of a computer system which will link both operational and instructional uses.

The long-term program is designed to be installed in phases, the first of which includes purchasing microcomputers and basic user software, training local instructors and implementing a computer operations

On March 19, the board passed a resolution instructing Rowe to pursue a bid with International Business Machines for the entire package the company proposed. The proposal included a System 38 Central Processing Unit and related hardware, software, maintenance and training.

The system's cost is approximately $545,000 plus interest, to be purchased from the capital outlay fund on a five-year lease/purchase agreement.

The board also directed Rowe to determine which pieces included in the IBM bid can be purchased from other vendors, and bid on competitively. He said these pieces consist mainly of the microcomputers and printers; they will be bid on "My anticipation is to have the microcomputers delivered before June and then to begin training over the summer," Rowe said.

The district's operational, or administrative, side intends to use the computer system for accounting, student reporting, attendance and an employee management system. The district's instructional sector has the goal of providing training for all personnel in three areas consisting of data management, word processing and spread-sheet usage.

"The goal is that everyone will become computer users, then teach the students," Rowe said.

He said when looking toward one of the bleakest financial years school systems have seen in 13 to 15 years, the board's decision to make the expenditure indicated it saw the need for computers and their importance in the future.

"I am elated and satisified," Rowe said.

"I am proud of the board of education," he said.

He said most responses from employees have been positive, but some have reservations about the computer's ability to save time. The largest obstacle Rowe sees facing the plan is the willingness of the employees to use the computers.

"I believe in 10 years (computer networking is) going to be a factor in the way schools are organized,' Rowe said.

Following years of planning, the University may soon have a new Horticulture Garden that would serve as an educational resource and a demonstration of the diverse plants adaptable to Kansas, a University

Paul Jennings, head of the Department of Horticulture, told the Advisory Committee on Campus Development the long-term benefits of the $180,000 Horticulture Garden far outweigh its cost.

A fund-raising drive to collect $480,000 in contributions for the project, to be located west of the Dairy Barn and greenhouses along Denison Avenue, is in progress and more than $50,000 has been committed. A large provide an account for maintenance, Jennings said.

from the scene of the reported fighting in Honduras

'There are still Nicaraguan troops in Honduran territory," U.S. Embassy spokesman Arthur Skop said. "I do not know if some Sandinista soldiers have managed to return to Nicaragua.

He said some Nicaraguan soldiers had been taken prisoner, but he said he did not know how many. It was not clear whether Skop was referring to two young men the Honduran military presented at a news conference Wednesday

The Honduran officials said the two men, who appeared frightened, were Sandinistas who were captured Monday inside Honduras.

U.S. military helicopters based at Palmerola air base on Wednesday carried about 600 Honduran soldiers to join 3,000 Honduran troops already near the border.

"People's power was growing from the bottom up for a long time, but finally the people's power reached the middle class and when it did things changed," Stoltzfus said.
"The middle class took this style essentially nonviolent - and made it their own and made some fundamental political changes.

Senator seeks support for presidency

Dole says he's 'logical' choice for job

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa - Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, saying it's never too early to start a presidential campaign, told Iowa Republicans Monday that his Senate experience and agricultural background make him a logical successor to Ronald Reagan.

"I am very serious about running," Dole told an audience of about 60 people. "I would hope I'd be taken seriously in this state.

The Kansas Republican ran for president in 1980 but finished far back in the pack. He said his visit Monday to the state holding the nation's first precinct caucuses was to find out how much support there is for another bid.

Dole said others considering a presidential bid include Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, former Chief of Staff Alexander Haig and former Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick.

"I believe things have changed since 1980," Dole said. "There are no more clones of Ronald Reagan. We all have our voting records for you to

"As Majority Leader I've had to make a lot of hard choices and I will stack my hard choices up with theirs," he said.

Dole said earlier that Kemp and another possible candidate, Vice President George Bush, will have troubles in Iowa defending the poor farm economy.

"What are they going to talk about?" Dole said. "I've never been a big cheerleader for supply-side economics. I suppose Jack Kemp can talk about the gold standard."

Dole joked that his wife, Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole, also was considering a bid.

"We've thought about a Dole-Dole ticket. We really could save some money," he said as his Des Moines audience broke into laughter and ap-

Dole said his years growing up on his father's "cream-and-egg farm" and then working for a grain elevator company after law school would help his candidacy.

"I can debate agriculture with any of my opponents," he said. "I've been around farmers and agriculture my whole life."

At a news conference after the meeting. Dole acknowledged it was early in the political season to start his "Campaign America."

"It's the nature of the beast," he said. "I have a lot of catching up to

Dole, who said he was encouraged about a possible presidential bid, was scheduled to make stops in five other Iowa cities.

He said being in Iowa also gives him the chance to stump for the reelection of Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa. Polls have shown Grassley with a wide lead over Democratic challengers.

Mexicana airliner crashes into peak; all 166 found dead

By The Associated Press

MORELIA, Mexico - A Mexicana Airlines jet carrying 166 people crashed into a mountain Monday soon after leaving Mexico City for two Pacific resorts and Los Angeles. The airline said everyone aboard was killed.

The Boeing 727 hit the peak about 90 miles northwest of Mexico City, near Maravatio, on its way to stops in Puerto Vallarta and Mazatlan. There was no immediate word on whether any passengers were U.S.

An airline statement said the pilot radioed that he was losing altitude and mentioned problems with cabin pressure in his last message. A source at the Mexico City airport said contact with the jet was lost 14 minutes after takeoff.

"Unfortunately, there are no survivors," Mexicana spokesman Fernando Martinez Cortes said of the 158 passengers and eight crew members on Flight 940. He said federal highway police were first at the crash site on the 7,792-foot mountain known locally as El Carbon, and reported that all aboard apparently were killed on impact Helicopters began taking the bodies down to a base camp for transport to Morelia by ambulance. Officials said crews at the site were looking for the flight recorders, but the body recovery operation was suspended when darkness fell and would be resumed Tuesday.

Jorge Sanchez, a helicopter pilot who brought down six bodies, said the jetliner was "in pieces. ... The largest single piece was the tail, and everywhere there were bodies.'

He said the tail section was in a clearing on a ridge, with other wreckage scattered over 500-600 yards. He reported the crash started . several small brush fires.

Sanchez said witnesses in the crash area told him "the airplane already was burning when it came in. They said there were two explosions on impact."

Exiled leader Marcos calls Aquino corrupt

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - Ferdinand E. Marcos said Monday that he was not corrupt but that President Corazon Aquino is, and he may return from exile to rescue Filipinos from a "monster" bent on enslaving

The former president, who fled Feb. 26, commented in a message and handwritten letter, calling himself a victim of the "blackest of propaganda." He accused "elements of the American government" of helping oust him. He said Aquino was the "No. 1 looter." a charge that has been made against Marcos. A source close to Marcos made a tape of the message and a copy of the letter available to The Associated Press.

Presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag said Aquino greeted the comments "with typical calm and equanimity." He said Marcos, 68, may be allowed to return "in the distant future, but not just now."

"The greatest service Marcos has done to the Filipino nation is to leave it," Saguisag said. "He should not negate it by threatening to come

In a telephone statement from Honolulu, which the source said was taped Monday, Marcos said: "We must war again against the monster who imposes slavery." The voice was clearly his.

A postscript to an eight-page letter dated March 21 and addressed to 'My beloved Filipino countrymen' in his home province, Ilocos Norte, said: "Death, yes, we will accept perhaps, but slavery never, never, never.'

Marcos told reporters in Honolulu on Sunday that he still considers himself president.

The letter was written on stationary of Malacanang Palace, which has become a museum to preserve what Aquino's government calls the excesses of Marcos and his wife, Imelda.

Marcos accused Aquino of allowing her followers to loot his palace and try on the hundreds of dresses Imelda left behind.

"There was looting not only by the poor but by the rich and powerful...The more outstanding ladies in the opposition started fitting and using the dresses of the First Lady," he said.

"Cry, my beloved people...There is trouble abroad in the land, trouble that reaches into every corner.'

Marcos said the "coup d'etat" against him "was apparently helped by some of the elements of the American government," but he gave Associates in Manila have quoted him as saying he could have crushed the uprising that drove him out but did not want to shed blood.

Foreign policy critic to speak on campus

By The Collegian Staff

John Stockwell, an agent for the Central Intelligence Agency for 12 years and author of the 1978 book, "In Search of Enemies: A CIA Story," will speak at 7:30 tonight in Forum Hall.

Stockwell is a critic of CIA activity and U.S. foreign policy relating to Nicaragua and the region. He opposed President Reagan's 1985 request of $14 million in U.S. aid to the Contra rebels fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government. Reagan is appealing to Congress for $100 million in aid this year. In 1980 and 1981, the CIA gave covert aid to the Contras who are cy and his superiors' failure to imfighting against the Sandinista government. A frequent lecturer, Stockwell delivered a speech April 16, 1985, to approximately 150 K-State

"The misery in Nicaragua and there is misery - is the result of Reagan, the Contras and his policies," Stockwell said during the speech sponsored by the Coalition for Human Rights.

Stockwell's book documents the CIA's paramilitary operations in Angola during 1975-76. He was chief of the CIA's Angola Task Force at the time, but resigned from the agency in 1977.

The former U.S. Marine captain and CIA case officer said he left the agency because he became disillusioned with chronic mismanagement within the agenprove operations.

Stockwell's presentation tonight is the third of four Lou Douglas Lectures.

By The Associated Press NEW YORK - Oil prices hit their lowest levels in eight years Monday, plunging more than a dollar a barrel to less than $11 on the futures market. Analysts said a continuing fall into single-digit figures was like-

"There's nothing holding the market up," said Andrew Lebow, at the Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. securities firm.

In Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba was quoted as saying that oil prices would drop to "$8 to $5 a barrel" without cooperation among producers inside and outside the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"There is no bottom level that can arrest the downslide in prices," the official Emirates News Agency quoted Oteiba as saying.

But U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington disagreed with that view. "I think we're getting near the bottom," he said at a meeting with reporters in Washington. "I would be very surprised to see it fall to levels much lower than where it is right

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the major U.S. grade of crude, closed at $10.42 a barrel. That was down 9 percent from Thursday's close of $11.44, and 66 percent from the $31.01 close of Nov. 25, the day before the current price slide began. The market was closed Friday in observance of Good Fri-

In 1978, refiners were paying an average $10.61 a barrel for domestic Futures contract prices for refined products, such as gasoline and heating oil, also slumped Monday. Among contracts for April delivery, unleaded gasoline closed at 36.75 cents a gallon, down from 31/2 cents from Thursday's 40.25-cent close, while heating oil closed at 42.78 cents, down from 43.88 cents. "Oteiba's comments about $5 oil

Oil prices reach lowest level in 8 years didn't help the sentiment, and the warm weather hasn't helped either," Lebow said. As temperatures rise, demand for heating oil falls off.

The curret slump began with a glut in world supplies that was already putting downward pressure on prices late last year. In December, OPEC announced it would increase production to preserve its "fair market share," abandoning previous attempts to support the market price through restrained production.

The decision sent rices into another tailspin, leading OPEC members to call for renewed cuts in output by both the cartel and non-OPEC members such as Britain and Mexico. But at a nine-day-long meeting in Geneva that ended March 24, members of the 13-nation cartel could not win agreement from nonmembers on production cuts and it failed to devise a strategy for cutting its own production. The members agreed only to reconvene on April 15.

"The bottom line is, traders don't see anything to hold back prices from falling. There's just too much oil out there," said Peter Beutel, an analyst with Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., a New York commodities futures firm.

A recent study by Charles River Associates Inc., a Boston-based consulting firm, estimated the world supply of oil in April would exceed demand by 4.2 million barrels a day, 'two to three times the imbalance recorded in January and February."

Consuming nations will need 44.9 million barrels a day in April, while producers will be pumping 49.1 million barrels daily, the report aid.

Because of that glut of supply, Lebow said he believed "the market will go into single digits."

"But I don't think it will be sustained, because lower prices will turn to higher demand," he added.

Fire sears Hampton Court Palace

LONDON - Fire raged through the magnificent 16th-century Hampton Court Palace of Henry VIII Monday, burning out its south wing, damaging priceless royal art treasures and killing one person. believed to be the widow of a top British general.

The four-hour blaze sent the leaded roof of the three-story south wing crashing through into art galleries on the lower two floors, causing millions of dollars worth of damage.

Hampton Court, containing hundreds of rooms, is Britain's second most popular tourist attraction after the Tower of London.

Officials said the blaze probably started in a top-floor apt Hartf in the south wing occupied by Lady Daphne Gale, the 86-year-old widow of Gen. Sir Richard Gale. She was thought to have died in the fire. Seven or eight other elderly residents were escorted to safety.

Blacks defy ban, attend memorial

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - About 20,000 blacks defied a ban Monday to attend a memorial for a Communist Party leader who died in exile, and an activist announced resumption of a regional boycott of white businesses.

The memorial for Moses Mabhida, a black nationalist who died March 8 in Mozambique, was held at a soccer stadium in Zwide, a black township outside the Indian Ocean city of Port Elizabeth.

Security forces took up positions near the stadium, but a reporter said they did not interfere despite a government ban on outdoor gatherings. Anti-apartheid violence often has followed such mass funerals or memorials.

Mkhulesi Jack, a prominent anti-apartheid activist, announced during the four-hour service that a black consumer boycott of whiteowned businesses in Port Elizabeth would resume April 7.

Promoters to start new crusade

In a reprise of last year's "We Are the World" global sing-along, promoters of a coast-to-coast handshake to fight hunger unveiled a new charity anthem, "Hands Across America," in a nationwide Good Friday broadcast.

Hundreds of people gathered on the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York to join in the singing of "We Are the World," followed by the new song. Radio stations in Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, D.C., Albuquerque, N.M., Kansas City, Mo., Little Rock, Ark., and Rome, Ga., among others, also broadcast the songs.

Hands Across America organizers are asking the public to contribute at least $10 for the chance to join hands in a line that will cross 16 states and the District of Columbia. They hope to raise up to $100 million to fight hunger and homelessness in the United States.

Dairy cattle branding stirs protest

WASHINGTON - Animal rights leaders marched in front of the Agriculture Department on Monday to protest a requirement that dairy cows headed for slaughter under a federal program be branded on the face with hot irons.

Cleveland Amory, founder of the Fund for Animals, told two dozen companions that the USDA's branding requirement was the most totally, stupidly unnecessary cruelty" he has seen in 10 years. The branding will be required on the faces of 951,619 cows, 340,789 heifers and 257,995 female calves destined for market over the next 18 months under the department's new "whole-herd buyout" pro-

The plan was designed last year by Congress to cut milk surpluses by enabling some dairy farmers to sell their herds and stay out of dairying for five years.

Dairy farmers whose sell-out bids were accepted also will get subsidies to help compensate them for selling their herds.

CBS newsman held at protest site

WARRENSBURG, Mo. - Correspondent Mike Wallace and two collegaues from the CBS News program "60 Minutes" were detained temporarily by federal and local authorities Friday morning while covering a protest at a nuclear missile silo site in western Missouri. Five protesters, who claimed to have disarmed two missile sites near Warrensburg in western Missouri, were being held at the Johnson County Criminal Justice Center for federal authorities. Officials at Whiteman Air Force Base, whose security police detained the five protesters and the CBS News crew about 7 a.m., issued a statement saying that damage at the missile sites included cut fences, slogans painted on cement and damage done to an electrical outlet.

A statement from Jim Noonan, CBS News spokesman in New York, said the network's people were detained about one hour before being released. Wallace left Warrensburg for Kansas City International Airport, but producer Paul Fine and Craig Gibson, a sound technician, were still at the criminal justice center Friday afternoon, trying to get back film and equipment confiscated by the authorities.

The CBS statement said the crew was "filming as part of a story on anti-nuclear protesters who seek publicity for their cause by trespassing on federal facilities."

Beagles to audition for opera scene

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Never mind the fat lady's song, what about the beagle's bark?

The Lyric Opera of Kansas City has announced an audition on April 9 for beagles to appear in an upcoming production of Friedrich von Flotow's "Martha." The opera, set in England, features a 19th centrury hunt scene with members of Queen Victoria's court.

"Animals always add that extra flair to a production, and beagles are the authentic dogs of the British hunting tradition," said director Francis Cullinan.

Group OKs driver's license fees

TOPEKA - The House Transportation Committee Monday endorsed and sent to the floor a bill that would increase driver's license fees to help cover the cost of examining and licensing.

Under the measure, an operator's license to drive an automobile would increase from $6 to $8. Truck and bus drivers' licenses would rise from $10 to $12, and motorcycle permits would go from $3 to $5. Beginners' permits would increase from 50 cents to $2.

State Revenue Secretary Harley T. Duncan has said an increase in fees is necessary to make the operation of the state's licensing and examining control bureau self-supporting. The increases in the bill would raise about $1.1 millon.

A Senate-approved version of the measure would increase an automobile operator's license by $4, and a truck and bus license by $5. Those increases would have generated an additional $1 million.

WASHINGTON - A cheap and deadly new form of Mexican heroin is inundating many American cities and could trigger an increase in the total number of addicts for the first time in more than five years, the government reported Friday.

The growing use of "black tar," as it is called by its users, "stems from its high purity, low price and widespread availability," said a study by the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Black tar is a cut-rate make of heroin that first started appearing on U.S. streets in 1983 and sells for as little as $2.50 a dose, about onetenth of the price of the conventional Mexican powder heroin, said the report's author, Thomas Locke, an FBI official assigned to the Black tar is up to 45 times as pure as conventional Mexican heroin and addicts unused to such potency frequently "can't handle a hot shot of this," Locke said.

After 15 years of working as a chemist, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, decided to return to the academic world. One of Hobrock's goals is to increase the number of books and periodicals in K-State libraries.

Library dean shifts gears, works to boost resources

By PATRICIA MALONE Collegian Reporter

After three degrees in chemistry and 15 years of working as a chemist, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, made an important switch in his life. He wanted to be back in the academic world so he pursued a fourth degree in library and information science.

"Basically, I found myself in the chemical industry and wanted back into the academic world," Hobrock said. "I shifted gears and got a fourth degree, a master's in library and information science at the University of Denver."

He began his second career at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in Blacksburg as a science librarian, specializing in chemistry, physics and mathematics. He soon began a quick climb as a systems librarian and then worked his way into information manage-

In 1975, he moved to the University of Nebraska at Lincoln as an assistant dean for planning and research.

"The dean in charge gave me opportunities to do almost everything to prepare me to do what I do now here at K-State,"

He arrived at the University in February 1982. Since his arrival, he has continued to work to "provide the kind of library support that the academic and research programs here at K-State deserve," Hobrock said.

One downfall Hobrock observes is that the library needs more books and periodicals.

"My assessment of the situation is we hold fewer resources than we should. Therefore my specific goals have been to increase those resources,' Hobrock said.

Hobrock said there has been a 70 percent increase in books and periodicals since 1980 and a 40 percent increase since 1982.

'We're also trying to increase efficiency. We're very rapidly growing with our use of microcomputers for the management of library information of all types," Hobrock said.

Hobrock also said within three to five years the library hopes to remove the card catalogs and offer an automated catalog. The goal is set for 1990.

A feature the library has which many students do not know exists is the special collections found on the fifth floor behind locked doors, he said.

"The kind of thing that usually draws outsiders into a library of this type is a library of specialized material called special collections," he said. "Strangely enough our biggest collection is cookbooks, dating back to the 16th century." Hobrock said there are approximately 4,000 cookbooks and the collections are old and rare. He also said these cookbooks are known all throughout the country.

Another of Hobrock's priorities is to continue to provide the highest quality of services possible to the students.

"The students deserve the ultimate in courtesy and help from us and we try to see that they get that from us," Hobrock said. "It's pretty rare to hear a complaint about the quality of service around here. Our staff is very dedicated.'

He gives the credit for the improvements at the library to his

"The support has been universal to improve the K-State library. Because of that we've made very important gains," Hobrock said.

"I like my staff very much. We're sort of like a family. Generally, people here work well together because they like and respect one another. They are truly a bunch of dedicated and likeable people," Hobrock

Included in his staff are about 250 student employees.

"The integration of student workers into our operations is a very positive aspect of working here. They do become part of the family," he said.

Legislature to permit vote on state lottery commended for their decision March 25 to allow voters to decide whether to create a state-run lottery. The measure slipped through the Kansas House (84-41) with just enough votes to put the proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot.

Although both the House and Senate approved the measure, the closeness of the vote is somewhat troubling. It indicates several lawmakers still believe the people's voice is not a priority when deciding an issue, such as the state lottery, which will have far-ranging effects on most Kan-

House Speaker Mike Hayden, R-Atwood, said he believes "more than anything else, people want to vote on the lottery." Hayden's statement should have been on the minds of every lawmaker while votes were cast last week.

Even the two-thirds majority wasn't easily attained. It was only after four representatives changed their initial votes that the majority was reached and the measure approved.

Rep. Alfred Ramirez, R-Bonner Springs, should be praised for applying the necessary pressure to push the Kansas legislators should be measure through the House. It was Ramirez who, while the measure lacked the two votes necessary to reach a two-thirds majority, persuaded two representatives to change their votes.

> "There are 43 people who have determined the people of Kansas cannot vote on this issue," he said. "Actually, just two people are stopping the people from voting."

The notion that a lottery is immoral, or serves only to strip poor Kansans of what few resources are at their disposal, is unfair. While the idea of permitting a lottery should not be dismissed on moral grounds, some credence could be given to the belief that the poor will be victimized by a lottery.

But a person's decision to play the lottery, regardless of the size of their wallet, can only be made by those paying the price of a ticket. After all, participation in the lottery would be voluntary.

More legislators, like Ramirez, should remember they are in the Legislature to represent the people's views, and shouldn't deny the people the right to vote on significant issues affecting them.

Pageants cater to sexist mentality

Spring and summer are troublesome times for Kansas feminists. As the years pass and women's issues gain greater recognition, beauty pageants such as the Miss Kansas Pageant in Wichita last weekend become more difficult for feminists to ignore.

Six K-State students were entered in the which will lead the winner to the Miss U.S.A. contest later this year. In early summer another Miss Kansas Pageant, this one the forerunner to the Miss America contest, will be staged in Pratt. society is all too often the message feminists ntly to counter - that women are only beautiful if they are young, thin, charming, entertaining and adorn themselves tastefully. Men can be aggressive, decisive and aged without embarrassment while these traits in a woman only detract from her

Feminists are sometimes reluctant to speak out against beauty pageants because the contestants are all hard-working women who have made many sacrifices to attain a point of distinction. Few feminists wish to criticize these women, yet by criticizing the pageant, the participants are inevitably offended. California feminists do not hesitate to criticize beauty pageants and, in fact, organize every year to conduct the Myth California Pageant behind the police lines of the Miss California Pageant in Santa Cruz,

The picketers are by no means subtle. They claim that beauty pageants encourage the objectification of women.

The message most beauty pageants send to ... "The "meat" motif is a common theme in the yearly protests. In 1982, the Myth California Pageant leader, Ann Simonton, a former fashion model, picketed in a 30-pound baloney dress with accents of pimento loaf, link sausages and olives sporting a banner labeled "Miss Steak."

Last year, Simonton appeared in a steak skirt as "Miss Behavin" and was arrested early in the protest for crossing the police line. The poster for the 1985 Myth California Pageant featured a shapley woman tagged "U.S.D.A. Choice," declaring "moo" as she

The Miss California parade was cancelled last year in order to downplay the protest. In 1983, Simonton donned a bathing suit and high heels. Chained to a bathroom scale, she joined the parade jumping through a tinseled hula hoop held before her by a male aid. The hoop's sign read "Beauty Obedience

The Myth California protesters, which usually number between 800 and 1,000 people, believe the Miss Caifornia Pageant's message harms young children because it impresses upon them that physical beauty is an extremely important part of social acceptance. Such an impression, Simonton said she believes, leaves many children with a low self esteem and can lead to anorexia and teenage suicide.

"I think it's important that we see these connections (with beauty pageants) that have to do with the way we're bringing up our children because we're grooming them to be victims," Simonton said in a June 13, 1985; issue of a Santa Cruz news magazine, Good Times.

Simonton also points to studies which indicate most rapists view their victim as a mere object rather than as a thinking, feeling person. This objectification of women, and to a lesser extent men, leads to shallow, selfish relationships and often to violence.

"We need to look at the situation and see how we can be more equal and loving and close, and not approach it with the attitude that, well, I'm going to make you an object so it's OK for you to make me an object,' Simonton said. "The beauty of who we are is our diversity and the richness of who we are is all the different colors we are, all the different attitudes we have.'

The methods of the California protesters may be far too extreme for Kansas. The philosophy of the protesters, however, is not. Though it is unlikely "Miss Steak" will appear in Pratt this summer, it is only a matter of time before Kansas feminists can no longer ignore the pageant tradition which, by its very nature, is a barrier to the advance-

Protests can alter Reagan's agenda

For over two years the Manhattan Alliance on Central America has sponsored educational programs for the campus and Manhattan communities. As part of a network of groups in Kansas and across the nation, we have also worked hard to persuade our representatives to stop U.S. support for the Nicaraguan contras.

The contras were originally organized, financed and directed by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency and are led by officers of former dictator Anastasio Somoza's national guard. In the last five years, they have killed more than 11,000 Nicaraguans, mainly through deliberate acts of terrror against non-combatants.

They have also destroyed hundreds of schools, medical clinics and agricultural cooperatives. We believe U.S. support for the contras is cruel and unjust, and makes enemies of people who would otherwise be our friends.

We are calling on those who share our view to join in a peaceful public protest on the morning of April 14, before the scheduled Landon Lecture of Secretary of State George Shultz. The purpose of this demonstration will be to express strong public disapproval of President Reagan's proxy war against Nicaragua — one day before the House will again vote whether to authorize another $70-$100 million for Reagan's contra crusade.

No doubt this invitation will meet skepticism from many on campus. More than once I have heard students express the view that demonstrations "don't work," or that protests are pointless exhibitions by those who "want to get their faces on TV or in the papers." Nothing could be further from the truth. Every movement for progressive change in this nation's history - for the rights of women, workers and blacks, and for peace in Vietnam - succeeded only because huge numbers of people took to the streets.

We need only remember the tremendous power of the protest movement against the Vietnam War. We now know that in the fall of

JOHN EXDELL Guest Columnist

1969, Richard Nixon was planning a major escalation of the war. In his memoirs he tells us that he delivered his secret "November ultimatum" to Hanoi, warning the Vietnamese that he would escalate the war massively, with the possible use of nuclear weapons, if they did not accept his terms.

It was not a bluff. Nixon had even reviewed mission folders with the nuclear targets recommended. But Hanoi did not yield and the escalation was not carried out. Why?

Nixon himself gives only one reason in his memoirs: there were too many Americans on the streets, demonstrating nonviolently against the war. As Nixon put it, the protest movement had so "polarized" public opinion that he would not have sufficient support for his plan. The antiwar movement had tied his

Of course he was careful not to reveal this to the public at the time. When hundreds of thousands filled Washington, D.C., for the Vietnam Moratorium March, Nixon pretended he was nonchalantly watching a Washington Redskins football game on television.

I am sure there are many on our faculty today who participated in those marches as students, either in the capital or in their hometowns. Little did we know then that we helped prevent the third U.S. use of nuclear weapons, and turned the nation decisively in the direction of its phased withdrawal from

On April 14 we have the same opportunity to stand against war in Central America.

As a group we can tell the Secretary of State Schultz and the politicians assembled for the speech that vocal sentiment is growing against Reagan's war in Central America, and that they can expect resistance to escalation if they take us any further into the quagmire.

Second, with the national media focused on our University, we can speak to the nation itself, and especialy to students and faculty on other campuses. They will know that even in the heartland, on a traditionaly "safe" campus, the administration cannot escape it advesaries. Our example can help build the kind of nationwide student movement that stopped the war in Vietnam.

Finally, as an individual participant, you can make a personal statement to your friends and family, that you care enough about this evil to stand out in the open and be seen. It is a message to those who know you: think about this, get informed, start taking responsibility for evil carried out with your taxes and in your name.

This is the first campus protest called by MACA. For anyone interested in helping plan and organize the demonstration, a public meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. on April 2 at Ecumenica Christian Ministries, 1021 Denison Avenue.

MACA is also providing another chance for people to learn more about the reality in Nicaragua. At 7:30 p.m. on April 10, Tomas Tellez, executive secretary of the Nicaraguan Baptist Convention, will speak at St. Isidore's Chapel, 711 Denison Avenue. The talk is free and open to the public.

John Exdell is an associate professor of philosophy and coordinator of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America Steering Committee.

Future water-rights applicants may have to present a conservation plan before their rights are approved, if the Kansas Water Plan makes it through the Legislature.

"The plan calls for efficient use of water resources by agricultural users, industrial users and municipal users," said Joseph Harkins, director of the Kansas Water Office, Topeka.

"The concept is to establish the authority of the chief engineer to require people who hold water rights to adopt an efficiency plan," he said.

Harkins said there was some question as to whether the state could restrict usage by existing waterrights holders. An amended version of the original plan is currently being considered by the Legislature.

"The conservation plan that will be under consideration is for when new water rights are granted. It is not retroactive," he said. "The chief engineer will require a conservation plan from applicants before water rights are granted. The plan must be approved by the Kansas Water Authority.'

Joe Peck, professor at the University of Kansas Law School, said the state could have potential legal problems with existing water-rights

"In the Water Appropriation Act of 1945, the state said water rights were real property," Peck said. "In fact, groundwater was held to be owned by the overlying ground owner to the same extent the soil was. Water rights are just as much property as a barn."

Peck said several state statutes implied the chief engineer has the power to impose conservation measures, but no statute expressly gave the state engineer that power.

"The state can require a certain amount of conservation, but if it goes too far, it can be deemed a taking," Peck said

A "taking" is defined as the state taking a person's property without just compensation.

Harkins said a second aspect of the plan would attempt to maximize efficiency of river systems regulated by large federal reservoirs during periods of drought conditions.

"It should be assured that there is an accessible water supply during low-flow conditions," Harkins said.

Harkins said if the state could operate the four reservoir systems as a single system, they might be able to increase yields 35 percent to

"By changing the way we operate the four reservoirs, we could avoid the necessity of building a new reservoir, which could cost $275 million to $300 million," Harkins said.

The river systems included under the plan are the Kansas, Neosho, Marais des Cygnes and Verdigris Harkins said the plan also dealt with water quality and water for recreational use.

UFM catalog fools students with fake courses few years. These classes were put into the catalog by Neil Schanker, assistant director of the Manhattan UFM pro-

UFM, UPC sponsor contests to pick winning photographs

By KIM KINSLOW Collegian Reporter

Sometimes a winning photograph comes along just by chance and turns out perfect the first time. That's what happened to Eileen Schofield, associate editor of the Agricultural Experiment Station.

"My husband and I were just looking for early spring flowers because we're botanists and I took a chance. I took one shot and it turned out perfectly," Schofield said. She said she started taking pictures when she wanted to record some of the trips she had taken.

Schofield's picture was selected as "Best in Show" in last year's photography contest sponsored by the Union Program Council. The photograph, called "Kansas in Winter," was entered in the landscape division. Schofield said she plans to enter this year's contest.

The 11th Annual UPC Photography Contest is open to all students, faculty and staff. There will be first and second place awards for each of the 11 divisions offered. The contest has changed from last year with the addition of a picture story/picture sequence category, said Marilyn Woodward, program adviser.

There are three professional categories and eight amateur categories in the contest. Professional status is defined as receiving photography supplementing income or supplies furnished by the Program to stress safety belt use

By The Collegian Staff

It's April Fool's Day, but people who wear their seat belts will be far from foolish.

Throughout the day, the Safety Belt Education Office of Kansas' Cooperative Extension Service will stress the importance of safety belts with its program, "Don't be a fool - buckle up.

The community-wide effort will feature programs in local schools, promotions at various businesses and the opportunity for the public to ride the Seat Belt Convincer.

The Convincer, a machine which simulates a 5 mph crash, will be set up at the K-State Union from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 4 to 6 p.m. in the Wal-Mart parking lot. Special "incentives" will be given to people who ride the Convincer at the Union, and Riley County 4-H members will hand out balloons to the riders at Wal-Mart.

Throughout the day, the message "Don't be a fool - buckle up" will be announced on local radio stations, and the Riley County Police Department will be issu-ing "citations" to everyone they stop who is wearing a seat belt. These "citations" will actually be coupons from local merchants. At the four Riley County high schools, students arriving at school with their seat belts on will also be given coupons donated by local merchants.

Sherry Blair, media coordinator of the program, said the seat belt promotion is not a new idea. Lawrence, Hutchinson and Olathe have had similar programs, but this will be Manhattan's first seat belt awareness day.

The Manhattan Jaycees will sponsor a window-painting contest carrying the seat belt theme at local businesses.

Attorney discusses review of federal sex equity laws

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

A review of recent federal laws concerning sex equity was given by Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney, during the noon Friday Focus on Women.

Thompson's topic was "Federal Law and Sex Equity: A Status Report."

She said there has been a lot of controversy in the last few years, but most agreement is found on the general national level where there is a commitment to wiping out race and sex bias in employment.

Thompson said Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which prohibits discrimination against women and other groups in public and private employment, was "extraordinarily revolutionary and imaginative."

Thompson said there is a question of whether the United States can approach enforcement of these laws only through remedies for individuals who can prove individual acts of discrimination or whether there can be remedies for classes of people.

U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese is the primary person opposing class base relief, Thompson said. He believes remedies should be given on an individual basis, and remedies on a class basis are a violation of Title VII, she said.

"Meese decided it is illegal to have any kind of court-approved remedies beyond remedies on an individual basis," Thompson

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission also does not enter into settlements on any kind of class basis, she said.

"Meese's position is popular to many, many people," she said. Thompson also discussed the comparable-worth theory. "This is a theory where it is believed that persons should be compensated on what they are worth to their employers. This is measured by professional studies," Thomp-

Thompson fears this notion will be unfairly transferred to the legal arena.

"If this notion is accepted and if one starts paying the employees on the basis of these studies, this can lead to economic problems and society can be greatly affected," she

Thompson also fears "the federal bureaucracy will dictate what the employer will pay for every job."

This theory has not been widely accepted at the federal level, she said.

The states are doing a lot of work in comparable-worth studies to determine if sex discrimination exists, Thompson said.

Lawmaker calls for rise in gas tax

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - U.S. Rep. Bob Whittaker, R-Kan., urged a Kansas House committee Monday to endorse a bill which would increase the state's gasoline tax to help finance a highway through the southern part of the state.

The proposal would raise the gasoline tax 2 cents, starting July 1, and the increased revenue would go into the state highway fund. On July 1, 1987, the tax would increase another 1 cent a gallon, and that money would go into a proposed southern Kansas Economic Development Freeway Fund.

However, state Transportation Secretary John Kemp criticized the plan, saying it did not focus on the need for highway construction statewide. His comments touched off an argument with the chairman of the House Transportation Committee, Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, who said he could not understand how Kemp could oppose the plan.

Also under the measure, the state would finance Gov. John Carlin's proposed economic development highway program, which would give interest-free loans to local units of government for highway pro-

Whittaker said he endorsed the bill wholeheartedly, because of its ultimate result - the contruction of a four-lane highway across southern Kansas from east to west.

The bill calls for the state Department of Transportation to build a "system of modern express highways and freeways," running east and west through Wichita.

Whittaker said much of the economic growth in Kansas over the past 20 years had taken place along the "golden triangle," formed by Interstates 35, 70 and 135. He said the average income in counties along those highways was $1,000 higher than the average income in counties without access to a four-lane highway.

"Now we need to look at other areas of the state," Whittaker said.

But Kemp said the plan put too much of an emphasis on the needs in southern Kansas. He said all areas needed new highways at a time when the state Department of Transportation could only afford to maintain and improve existing ones.

"It addresses a need in only one part of the state, not statewide needs," Kemp

That assertion got Kemp into a lengthy argument with Crowell, who said he was 'disappointed" with Kemp's testimony.

"For the life of me, I can't understand the opposition to this bill," Crowell said.

Key provisions of the bill include: - An increase from 11 cents a gallon to 13 cents a gallon in the state gasoline tax for FY 1987, which begins July 1, 1986. The estimated $28 million raised would go into the state's highway fund, used to pay for construction and maintenance of highways.

- An increase in the gasoline tax of 1 cent a gallon in FY 1988, with the estimated $14 million raised going into the southern Kansas highway fund. The state could increase the gas tax by as much as 1 cent a gallon in following fiscal years.

- The transfer of money raised from sales tax on the sale of new and used vehicles to pay for Carlin's Economic Development Highway Program. In FY 1987, the state would transfer about $22.7 million.

- The transfer of $8 million in federal money from the state highway fund into the fund for the southern Kansas highway. Crowell said because of an agreement between the state and federal officials last fall, Kansas will receive the extra money.

Kemp objected to the plan in part because the addtional money from the federal government is supposed to be used to compensate for the use of the Kansas Turnpike as an interstate highway, he

Louisville edges Blue Devils for NCAA title

By The Associated Press

DALLAS - Freshman Pervis Ellison lived up to his nickname of "Never Nervous," and it paid off in Louisville's second NCAA basketball championship in six years Monday night.

Ellison, a 6-foot-9 center, took over inside, scoring 25 points and pulling in 11 rebounds as he led No. 7 Louisville to a 72-69 victory over topranked Duke. He was named the Most Outstanding Player in the Final Four, the first freshman so honored since Utah's Arnie Ferrin in 1944.

"That's why we call him 'Never Nervous Pervis," said sophomore teammate Herbert Crook. "Down at the end, when we need rebounds, he

He did, scoring eight of the Cardinals' last 15 points and gathering two key rebounds that spoiled Duke's hopes of capping a record season with its first national crown.

The victory was the 17th straight for Louisville, which finished at 32-7. And it broke the 21-game winning streak of the Blue Devils, who finished 37-3, the most victories in a season in NCAA history.

Louisville needed everything Ellison could give to overcome a stellar performance by Duke's All-American guard Johnny Dawkins, who finished with 24 points. But, strangely, Dawkins could not seem to get the ball in the final minutes.

Louisville was leading 66-65 with 48 seconds to play and the clock running down when guard Jeff Hall missed a short jumper. Ellison grabbed the rebound and put it back in and the Cardinals had a three-point lead with only 41 seconds left.

"I saw the shot was falling short," Ellison said. "I got past everybody and laid it in."

Ellison assured the victory with 27 seconds left when he rebounded a missed shot by Duke's David Henderson, was fouled by Mark Alarie and sank two free throws to make it 70-65.

After Duke scored on rebounds by Jay Bilas and Danny Ferry, Louisville guard Milt Wagner sealed it with two free throws with two seconds remaining.

"I thought he made some great athletic moves around the basket and that did surprise me. He is a great offensive player," Alarie said.

Duke's guards outscored Louisville 35-13, Wagner not getting his first field goal until there was 5:33 left in the game. That came on a fastbreak set up by an Ellison blocked shot.

Louisville's front line outscored Duke's 48-30, but more importantly, Louisville outrebounded Duke 39-27, with Crook getting 12.

Louisville went ahead 42-41 on Crook's tap-in, which gave the Cardinals the lead for the first time since they were up 4-0. Dawkins then hit three straight jump shots, one leading to a three-point play, for a free throws to match Duke's biggest lead of the second half, 54-48.

Wagner and Thompson each picked up their fourth personal fouls during that period, and the Cardinals' chances seemed dim.

But the 6-foot-9 Ellison paced the Louisville comeback with the help of Wagner, a 6-5 senior who had only two points in the first half.

Wagner's three-point play cut Louisville's deficit to 61-60 with 5:33 remaining. Henderson then hit two free throws as Ellison picked up his fourth personal, but Ellison came back and hit from inside to cut the deficit back to one.

Wagner put Louisville ahead when he shook loose for a layup with 3:22

48-42 lead. Mark Alarie made two left. Duke regained the lead when Dawkins made a pair of foul shots but Thompson then pulled the Cardinals away for good.

Thompson, a 6-7 senior, added 13 points for Louisville, while Crook had 10. Wagner, who entered the game with a career total of 1,825 points, scored only nine, almost six points under his average. Dawkins, the leading scorer in Duke's history, finished with 24 points. Henderson added 14, Alarie 12 and Amaker 11.

Louisville, which has been in four of the last seven Final Fours, previously won the crown in 1980. This was the Blue Devils' fifth trip to the Final Four and third loss in the championship game.

A mixture of exhaustion and disappointment grips K-State Crew member Cala Selby, center, and teammates Yvette Guislain, left, and Barbara Berry after the finish of the women's varsity eight race in which they lost to Washburn University's varsity eight Saturday during the Founders' Day Regatta at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

K-State crew victorious in own regatta

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's men's crew team continued its success against Washburn Saturday in the Founders' Day Regatta at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

The men's varsity eight team captured a three-length victory with a time of 5:49.50, compared to Washburn's 5:59.89.

The Wildcats also won the freshman eight by a little more than four lengths with a time of 5:29.80. The Ichabod team finished in 5:41.88. In that same race, the 'Cats' junior varsity team trailed Washburn by two lengths, finishing with a time of 5:50.11.

The K-State men's varsity four fell to Washburn, losing by over two lengths, 5:40.00 to 5:46.97.

K-State's mixed eight team won by a narrow margin of 5:55.00 to 5:55.94. The K-State women's varsity eight lost their race by slightly more than two lengths. The Ichabod women won with a time of 6:07.00 compared to K-State's 6.15.45.

Coach Don Rose said he was disappointed the women lost.

"Washburn has improved, and we have too, although we didn't win," Rose said. "I'm partly to blame as we stuffed the line-up too much this past week. I think it will pay off in the future, however, and that is what will count in the long run."

Track team members win 3 Florida crowns

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

Coach Steve Miller said K-State accomplished what it set out to do in the Florida Relays track and field meet at Gainesville over the weekend.

"We had just generally a pretty darn good meet," Miller said. "We leave meets like that (the caliber of Florida) and people know Kansas State is there, and that's our goal. Our goal is to get our name around the country, which helps us recruiting. Now we've had some champions in those meets and that's what it's all about.'

Rita Graves set a K-State and Florida Relays record in the high jump, clearing 6-feet, 11/2 inch for first place.

"Rita really had a big breakout like I was hoping she would," Miller said. "Rita really had some good attempts at 6-21/2 too, which really puts her in a different category. She's getting closer and closer.

Also placing first for the Wildcats was Chris Vanatta in the 10,000 meter run in a school record time of 15:55.30. The other K-State woman finishing first was long jumper Kim Kilpatrick, who leaped 191/2 feet in her first-ever collegiate long jump

Kenny Harrison was a winner for the men's team, leaping 54-8 1/4 to take the triple jump. Harrison, a second-place finisher in the long jump (26-03/4), was a last minute entry in the triple jump.

Miller said Harrison was unhappy with his long jump finish when he asked to enter the triple jump at the last minute.

"He (Harrison) was just frustrated, and that was his reaction." Miller said. "He just wanted to get it out of his system."

Other men's placers included Mike Rogers, second in the 3,000 meter steeplechase (8:50.13); Brad Speer, third in the high jump (7-1 1/4); Melran Leach, fourth in the 200 meter dash (21.66); Jim Knudsen, fifth in the 5,000 meter run (14:24.34) and Dan O'Mara, sixth in the discus (171-8).

Other women's placers were Michelle Maxey, second in the 400 meter dash (53.75); Anne Stadler, second in the 3,000 meter run (9:34.29), Jacque Struckhoff, second with a school record in the 10,000 meter run (33:22.50), Chris Vanatta, third in the 10,000 (33:54.00); Kelly Abernathy, fourth in the discus (152-0) Felicia Carpenter, fourth in the triple jump (37-8 3/4) and fifth in the 400-meter hurdles (63.17).

Rugby team beats Kansas, 9-6

The K-State Rugby Club's A-Side squad defeated the University of Kansas Rugby Club team 9-6 behind the strength of three penalty kicks by Bill Knopick.

Following the match, Coach Danny Blea was happy with the win but thought his team needs a little work to be highly successful. "We need to show more continuity to win the Westerns (rugby championships). Our overall effort this weekend was good," Blea

The B-Side team lost to KU 12-4. K-State's scoring came from a one-try score by Blea.

Next action for the club will be Saturday at Emporia State in the All-Kansas Roundup.

Connors hit with suspension

NEW YORK - Veteran Jimmy Connors paid a $20,000 fine and began a 10-week suspension Monday, the Men's International Professional Tennis Council said.

The 33-year-old Connors, the world's fourth-ranked men's player, will not be able to play in a sanctioned tournament until June 9

"He has paid his fine and said he would begin his suspension," John Hewig, director of communications for the Pro Council, said. Connors was assessed the fine and suspension by the MIPTC after refusing to continue play during his semifinal match against Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the Lipton International Players Championships at Boca Raton, Fla., Feb. 21. The dispute began over a line call on a ball Connors thought was out.

He was fined $5,000 at the time by Ken Farrar, the chief MIPTC supervisor, and it was taken from his earnings of $28,150. The additional $20,000 fine and 10-week suspension were levied following an investigation of the incident by M. Marshall Happer III, administrator of the MIPTC.

WSU tops women's tennis team

The K-State tennis team's capped off a productive week on a down note as the women dropped a narrow loss to the Shockers from Wichita State on Saturday.

After the men and women split a pair of matches with Missouri at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area tennis courts on Friday, running their combined match victories for the week to 4-3, the women faced a strong Wichita State team the following day and fell 6-3.

"We've never won more than one match (individual) match against Wichita State," Coach Steve Bietau said. "For us to win three matches and be as competitive as we were was good for us."

Pacing the Wildcat attack on Saturday was Sigrid Ivarsson, who knocked off the Shockers' Michelle Van Den Heaver in straight sets 6-4, 6-2, at the No. 2 singles spot. Also notching a victory in singles was Annika Emtell. Emtell was forced to three sets before she downed Gloria Orue 2-6, 6-2, 6-3.

After falling in three sets, K-State's Kristy Line came back to team with Erica Anderson for another three set affair, but this time came out on top 6-2, 1-6, 6-2.

On Friday, the two teams came away with a split with the Tigers, but the men were forced to give up two matches by default. The men were without the services of their No. 6 singles player and No. 3 doubles team. The women swept past Missouri, who is not currently a member of the Big Eight Conference in tennis and plays as a club, with little resistance as the Wildcats came away 8-0 winners.

The next action for the teams will be against Baker College on Wednesday at the Washburn courts. Action is scheduled to get under way at 2 p.m. K-State opens up Big Eight Conference play on Friday when the men and women travel to Norman, Okla. to battle the Sooners. A Saturday match against Oklahoma State will follow the Sooner encounter.

Cats lose 4 in weekend series with tough Nebraska squad

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

LINCOLN, Neb. - Momentum is a mighty force in athletics. The K-State baseball team discovered how powerful momentum can be in a pair of baseball games Saturday against the Nebraska Cornhuskers. The Wildcats dropped a pair of games, 4-3 in the first nine-inning match and 12-3 in the second seven-inning game. K-State put up a persistent fight in the first game of the afternoon doubleheader, but the mental mistakes which plagued the Wildcats throughout the team's recent homestand showed up late in the game to haunt the Wildcats and award the Cornhuskers the decision. The Wildcats played scrappy baseball in the first game, despite only managing three hits. The 'Cats started the game with Mike Hinkle nabbing a walk from Nebraska pitcher Phil Harrison. Center fielder Gary Pridey capatilized on the walk by slamming his first home run of the season over the right field fence to establish a 2-0 lead for the 'Cats.

Timely Wildcat double plays smothered second and fourth inning rallies by the Cornhuskers as the K-State defense got tough with the "Big Red."

K-State starter Rocky Ferguson was able to avoid the 'Husker threats until the sixth inning, when Nebraska's all-American center fielder Paul Meyers rifled a line drive off the flag pole beyond the left field fence to tie the game at two. The bottom of the eighth saw the Wildcat momentum come to a hault when an error put Meyers on base, to go with a pair of singles and a passed ball by catcher Jeff Turtle to score the winning Cornhusker run.

The loss went to reliever Paul Iseman (1-1) who gave up two singles in the eighth. Cornhusker Burt Beattie scored when Brad Harvich came in and threw one pitch which snuck by Turtle.

The second game was a disaster for the Wildcats as Nebraska carried their momentum in the second match to smother the 'Cats. Starting pitcher Scott Lichlyter was yanked by Coach Gary Vaught after giving up three runs in only one inning.

K-State managed nine hits, including a seventh inning home run by Scott Gilbert, But Gilbert's efforts were too little too late as the 'Cats lost 12-3 with the four Wildcat pitchers giving up 13 hits and 11 walks.

Following the two game sweep, Vaught was bewildered how his team lost the first game and upset with his pitchers' inability to throw effectively in the second game.

"Our pitchers have got to throw strikes. (In the first game) we had an oppurtunity to win the ballgame and we got lazy in a couple places,'

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

LINCOLN, Neb. - In baseball, the general idea is when runners are in scoring position it is important to put the bat on the ball.

Simple theory. But it was the theory K-State baseball Coach Gary Vaught kept reminding his team of following K-State's second consecutive doubleheader sweep at the hands of the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

K-State, like in the first game Saturday, played well enough to win. The Wildcats put up a tough fight, but the Cornhusker hitters were too much as Nebraska prevailed 6-4.

The second game was one of missed oppurtunities for K-State as inning after inning the Wildcats could not come up with clutch hits to bring runners across the plate. The seveninning game ended with the Cornhuskers on top 3-1.

"We've got guys going to the plate with men on base - who are afraid to choke up on the bat, put the ball in play and score some runs. You've got to put the ball in play and I guarantee were going to find some kids who can do it," Vaught said.

Nebraska played solid baseball in the first game to overcome K-State pitcher Tom Smith's nine strikeouts. Behind the spectacular play of all-Big Eight Conference performer Larry Mims, the 'Huskers never allowed K-State to take the lead.

Things did not look good for Smith and the Wildcats in the first inning. The 'Huskers came right after Smith, using a single, double, a pair of walks and a hit batter to score two runs and put the Wildcats down early

The Wildcats fought back in the fifth inning. A one-out single by Gary Pridey and an error on Pridey's attempted steal which moved him to third, set up an RBl single by Otto Kaifes. Mike Hamacker then slapped a double which scored Kaifes and set the score at 3-2.

But with the bases loaded and one out, third baseman Jim Donohue struck out looking and Brent Gibson bounced out to Mims at second base.

K-State tied it up in the seventh, but Nebraska won the game 6-4 on a towering two-run home run from designated hitter Rich King just inside the left field foul pole.

In the second game, K-State blew scoring chances in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings to only produce one run on six hits.

The four-game series sweep by the Cornhuskers placed them at the top of the Big Eight standings and pushed K-State's record down to 15-14.

K-State will travel to Tulsa, Okla., today to play the fifth-ranked Oral Roberts Titans. Wally Bramlage (2-0 6.87 ERA) will get the start for K-State.

K-State's next home game will be Thursday night against the Nebraska Cornhuskers when the two team's meet in a non-conference game. The first pitch will be at 7.

Station seeks funds for wattage increase

By KIM KINSLOW Collegian Reporter

Today marks the kick-off of KSDB-FM's fund raising campaign to raise money to increase the wattage of the station, said Shelly Wakeman, sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

Activities start today and will continue through Saturday.

"Our (KSDB) goal is to raise $14,000. This would give us everything we need (for the power increase)," Wakeman said.

Even with all the activities planned for the week, Wakeman doesn't think they will raise all the money this week and has more events, including live band performances, planned for later this semester.

Today, the Alternative Auction begins with the on-the-air auctioning of various items donated by Manhattan merchants. Some of these items include a Sony walkman, a round trip for two to Kansas City and a used Gibson acoustic guitar. Also to be auctioned off will be a five-course beef Wellington dinner for two, to be prepared in the winner's home by Chef Gordon Butte.

The auction continues on the air Wednesday at 11 a.m, 2 and 8 p.m.

The Producers, with special guest, The Answer, will be appearing at Mannequins Wednesday night with some of the proceeds going toward the fundraising effort.

On Friday, KSDB will sell sledgehammer swings at an old station wagon, one swing for 25 cents or three swings for 50 cents. The wagon will be parked between the Union and Seaton Hall.

Saturday, the fund raising will continue with the selling of T-shirts at Open House and later that evening Charlie's Bar will donate 50 cents of the $1.50 cover charge. Also at the bar, beer signs donated by Campbell Distributors Inc., 825 Levee Drive, will be auctioned off, Wakeman said.

Along with the fund raising, KSDB hopes to build awareness that the radio station is a community-supported station, said David MacFarland, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

Wakeman said their biggest hopes of raising money are with the bands and the auction. Wakeman estimated more than $1,400 worth of merchandise will be donated.

Commission's vote to affect day-care center zoning laws

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan City Commissioners are expected to vote tonight on an ordinance to allow the establishment of group day-care centers in general business district zones.

The proposed ordinance amendment was prompted by a request to open a day-care center for Nautilus Towers in Aggieville.

The commissioners are also scheduled to hear two resolutions concerning community improvements.

The first is an amendment to the contract with Vector Corp. to provide relocation services for the Downtown Redevelopment Project. Vector has been retained by the city to provide relocation assistance upon request for businesses displaced by the proposed Town Center Mall.

The second is to consider authorizing BG Consultants, 206 Southwind Place, to provide design services for the Seth Child's improvement project. The project would include the widening of Seth Child's Road to four lanes, with traffic control lights and turn lanes.

Commissioners are also scheduled to receive a petition from property owners along Claflin Avenue between Wreath Avenue and Meadowbrook Lane requesting new street, curb and gutter, storm drainage and sidewalk construction. Commissioners are to hear a resolution to consider authorizing the project's construction.

The city commission will meet at 7 tonight in the commission meeting room of the City Administration Building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

'Our Town' demonstrates life's realities

By LAURIE FAIRBURN Entertainment Editor

A visit to "Our Town" is a visit inside the minds and hearts of people we all have known, or would like to have known. It is a visit to the depths of our feelings about growing up, growing old, about living with death.

Play Review

The K-State Players production of Thorton Wilder's "Our Town," in performance tonight through Saturday in Nichols Theatre, begins calmly and simply, evolving to an end full of realizations. Its message: It is the people who touch our lives that give life its importance; it is how we live our lives, not where.

The K-State Players, under the skilled direction of Lew Shelton, expressed this point beautifully.

The year is 1901. Light casts a shadow from a birch tree over the lawn between the homes of the Gibbses and the Webbs as the Stage Manager gives visitors the layout of Grover's Corners, New Hampshire, from the north, south, east and west.

The stage of Nichols Theatre is bare except for two kitchen tables with chairs, and a garden trellis off to the back. The Stage Manager introduces the town's residents as they pantomime preparing breakfast, eating, reading the paper, mowing the lawn.

Timothy Smith, as the Stage Manager, is the play's narrator. He sets the pace and helps the audience to understand what Wilder wants them to feel.

In this capacity Smith is outstanding. He presents a depth of character and omnipotence so casual it is inviting, yet so intense it is spellbinding. He seems to make contact with each member of the audience as he gains their trust.

The play centers on Emily Webb and George Gibbs. Nancy Sloan, as Emily, shines in many aspects of her performance. She is adept at pantomime and believable as she portrays Emily through adolescence, young adulthood and death. We see Emily age on the inside, despite minor changes on the outside, and Sloan should be credited for her ability to bear Emily's soul.

Mark A. Cross, as George, is not quite as strong in performance, but provides a balance to Sloan's Emily. George's character seems too guarded, too stereotypically masculine. He goes through a range of emotions, but he seldom struggles with them like he should.

Particularly strong performances are delivered by Charles W. Edwards, as Emily's dry-witted father and Barry Pearson as George's rather stuffy father. Bradley W. Prior engages a wonderfully entertaining north-eastern accent as Howie Newsome, the milkman.

The costumes, by Lydia Aseneta, were appropriate and low-key, and it must be mentioned that the women's costumes, and many of the men's, were designed by Aseneta and contructed by her and her staff. Make-up design, by Teri Myers, was also excellent, make-up being particularly challenging to control due to the closeness of the audience.

"Our Town" in spirit, is everybody's town — and everyone should make a trip home.

City's work force may rise in 1986

By SAM HOSTETTLER Collegian Reporter

A positive outlook is being forecast for the work force of Manhattan, according to an Employment Outlook Survey taken by Manpower Inc., a worldwide temporary-help agency.

Gary Dierking, service representative of Manpower Temporary Services in Manhattan, said 17 percent of the city's employers are going to increase their staff, while 7 percent are making reductions in staff levels. The remaining 76 percent surveyed see no changes in employment.

"The wholesale/retail firms are showing a moderate to slight increase in Manhattan," Dierking said.

"The public utilities sector also shows a slight increase as well as the finance, insurance and real estate sectors," he said.

Manpower Inc. conducts the Employment Outlook Survey on a quarterly basis. It is a measurement of employer intentions to increase or decrease the permanent work force. The survey, last conducted during the last two weeks of February, is based on telephone interviews with more than 12,500 public and private employers in 385 U.S. cities.

Tom Whalen, director of operations for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said he also sees a significant growth in these areas of employment. But the strongest area he sees is in the construction industry.

"In January of 1986, the building permits were 10 times what they were in 1985," Whalen said. "In February 1986, they were seven times better than in 1985. This shows a lot of people in construction are working now."

With the mild winter and a number of new projects, Whalen said he sees a record year for construction.

"The building permit for the downtown mall was approved this year and many construction workers will be employed," he said. "It is also feasible they will start building the (Fred Bramlage) Coliseum this year and the Southern Arterial is being built at the edge of town. These projects will keep a lot of contractors and construction workers in business."

Whalen believes contractors and construction workers are not the only people to benefit from the construction of the new mall.

"The mall will bring about approximately 600 new jobs to Manhattan," he said. "This will help not only the residents of Manhattan who need a job but also students who are looking for part-time work."

Another indicator of the decrease in the unemployment rate in Manhattan is in the area of sales tax.

"Through the end of January, Riley and Pottowatamie counties had an increase in sales tax," Whalen said. "This indicates that people are earning more money. They then in turn go shopping and this in turn increases the sales tax."

Whalen is also optimistic about the employment in the manufacturers work force in Manhattan even with the closing of two companies.

"Last year, Guerdon Industries closed down and 30 people will lose their jobs with the closing of TRW in May," he said. "In the coming months, however, Walker Manufacturing will eventually double the work force that was lost with the closing of these companies."

Whalen also sees more employment in Manhattan when Kansas Farm Bureau moves to a new site.

"We have to make sure that Farm Bureau's old dwelling is marketable to someone," he said. "It is a large building and it is in a good location for business."

Lorene Oppy, manager of Manhattan Job Service Center, said unemployment is well stabilized in Manhattan.

"The unemployment rate has stayed at a pretty even 3.1 percent for the last couple of years," she said. "This only takes into account people who are collecting unemployment insurance, though."

Oppy said she feels the biggest reason why Manhattan has such a low unemployment rate is there are no large industries, per se, in town.

"Manhattan is a town comprised of small businesses," she said. "By small business I mean a business that has 10 employees or less. With these small businesses you don't have any big layoffs."

Looking at the survey, Dierking said increases in employment outnumber decreases.

"Everything looks pretty stable," he said. "I think there is a pretty positive outlook for employment in Manhattan."

Memorial Hospital officer quits

By The Collegian Staff

The chief executive officer of Memorial Hospital Inc. announced her resignation Monday afternoon.

Anne Renz, chief executive officer of Memorial, Sunset Avenue and Claflin Road, announced her resignation to the hospital's board of directors 4:30 Monday, according to Tom Palma, director of public relations for Memorial.

Renz came to Manhattan as director of nursing at Memorial in 1981, and was named interim CEO in late October of that year. She was officially named to the position in May of 1982.

Renz will be accepting the position of vice president of operations for Dakota-Midlands Hospital, Aberdeen, S.D. Renz's last day at Memorial is to be May 9. She is to begin her position at Dakota-Midlands May 19.

Palma said Dakota-Midlands is approximately twice the size of Memorial, and is owned and operated by Health Central Corp. of Minneapolis.

Bill may aid farmers in foreclosure battles

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A House committee Monday began working over an important farm bill that would grant a "stay of execution" to some farmers who face losing their land to creditors.

The House Agriculture and Small Business Committee made major amendments to the bill, but did not take final action on the measure. The committee will continue its work Tuesday.

Under the Senate-approved measure, a farmer could go to court to prevent a creditor from foreclosing on a mortgage on his or her land or equipment. The court could then grant a one-year moratorium, as many as three

As amended by the committee, the farmer could be required to pay up front the interest on the revised fair market value of his or her land or equipment, or both, as determined by the court. But the court also could allow the farmer to pay one-fourth of the amount up front and the rest in quarterly in-

The interest the farmer would likely pay would be 2 percent higher than the interest rate on shortterm U.S. Treasury bills, which the federal government sells to raise money. The interest rate, which is set every two weeks, is now about 7 percent.

Much of the committee's effort during a two-hour lunchtime meeting was spent wrangling over the interest rate a farmer would be required to pay.

Officials from the Federal Land Bank and the Kansas Bankers Association had recommended the farmer be required to pay the same rate as that on his or her mortgage, saying it would be unfair to "hit" a creditor with a lower interest rate. But the committee rejected two attempts to make the interest rate higher.

One amendment would have made the interest rate the same as that the state allows creditors to charge on mortgages for residential real estate. The rate, which is set monthly, is now 11.4

Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, said increasing the interest rate would make passage of the bill more

Students can earn award for recruiting

By PATRICIA MALONE Collegian Reporter

Undergraduate students can earn $100 scholarships for themselves and for prospective students by recruiting future students to visit the College of Human Ecology during

Open House on April 5. "The College of Human Ecology is having a scholarship contest to promote Open House and to try to encourage current students to invite prospective students to visit the college of Human Ecology," said Howard Barnes, assistant professor of human development and family

To enter the contest students must pick up entry cards from the recepin Justin Hall. Students must put their name, address and phone number on the cards and then mail them to as many prospective students as possible. Barnes suggested sending cards to younger brothers and sisters, friends in high school and possible junior college transfer students. Prospective students should return the cards April 5 when they visit the college. When all the cards are submitted there will be a drawing at 4 p.m. to determine which prospective student will receive the scholarship.

The other winner will be determined after Open House is over and all the cards have been submitted. The student who has the most prospective students return the cards which he or she originally mailed will receive the scholarship.

"The scholarship is for $100 toward a course in human ecology to be used anytime next year - summer, fall or spring," Barnes said.

Money for the scholarship will come from the college's general scholarship funds, which are administered by the KSU Foundation, said Karen Pence, assistant to the dean of the College of Human Barnes said he believes the contest is a good way to get current students involved with recruiting. He said using present students is a great way to make new contacts.

"If each student in the department could come up with six contacts we're talking about phenomenal figures," Barnes said.

Barnes said he wants to accomplish several things with the con-

"We're hoping to bring more students to Justin Hall and to also get current students to help in the recruiting process. This will help not just the College of Human Ecology but also the whole University," he

"It's the first year it's been tried and we certainly hope it will work. We're counting on the current students to make it work," Barnes

Politicians to make campus visits

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kansas, will be spending Wednesday on campus visiting political science classes and University leaders. Slattery, who was first elected as a Congressman in 1982, is scheduled to appear in three classes, meet with the Council of Deans, Young Democrats and representatives of the Division of Cooperative Extension. Prior to his moving to Washington, Slattery served as a state representative from 1972 to Slattery is scheduled to be on campus from 8:15 a.m. until 5 p.m. Following his K-State appearances, he has a "Town Hall Meeting" scheduled from 7 until 8:30 p.m. at the main auditorium in Junction City's City Building.

Jack Brier, Kansas Secretary of State, is scheduled to speak at 7 tonight in the Union Big Eight Room. Brier, R-Overland Park, has served as Kansas' Secretary of State for

The lecture is sponsored by Pi

Kansas revenues short because of tax refunds

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - With the bottom falling out of individual income tax revenue because of heavy tax refunds, state government took in $24.4 million less than expected in March, crushing optimism that Kansas has turned the corner financially or that it will any time soon.

Individual income taxes brought in $22.9 million below what had been expected in March, mainly because the Revenue Department paid out $30 million more in refunds than it had during March of 1985. That is because the state processed 77,000 more tax returns in March than a year earlier and the average refund of $227 was higher than a year ago.

In addition, corporation income tax revenues fell $890,000 below projections during the month, the severance tax slumped $268,000 below expectations and the compensating use tax was off $402,000.

Revenue Secretary Harley Duncan, reporting the monthly figures on flow of revenue into the state treasury, said that although sales tax collections matched what had been estimated to come in during March, that figure was misleading.

Duncan said between $2 million and $3 million in sales tax revenue had been reported in March when it actually was collected in February. "We are not seeing the increase in consumer spending that we have seen in the past," Duncan said. "I see no improvement. There is no reason to be optimistic in our economic performance."

The March report continued the malaise in which the Kansas economy has languished for months. It has prompted the administration of Gov. John Carlin to seek State Finance Council approval later this week to issue certificates of indebtedness so the Pooled Money Investment Board can "loan" the state treasury money from state idle funds now invested in order to pay the bills during April.

Alden Shields, former state budget director and now secretary of administration, said Carlin will ask for "a significant amount of money" to tide state government over a low point in cash flow in April.

Under revenue projections made last November, the state had anticipated taking in $100.4 million during March. It actually took in $76 million, with the $22.9 million shortfall in individual income taxes the biggest bite.

Senators to spend $500,000 on party involving students

By JODI JOURNALIST Senate Squealer

Student Senate unanimously voted to allocate $500,000 for a massive party involving the entire student body at its weekly meeting Thursday in the Senate Chambers.

The money, which comes from the $700,000 freed by the refinancing of student bonds, must be used for a project which will benefit the majority of students.

"I think we've succeeded admirably in meeting this guideline," said Sylvia Senator, freshman in tanning salon procedures and senate chairman. "What could benefit more people than a huge party?"

The bill, sponsored by Student Entertainment Committee, calls for the money to be spent by May 1986 "so that all of us in senate now can enjoy some of that money," said Linus Lawmaker, senior in striped suit techniques and supporter of the Dana Dissident, junior in adversarial management, opposed the legislation, calling it "a waste of time."

"We're never going to really see any of that money anyway. It's all a farce dreamt up by a public relations firm in the Mideast," she said.

An amendment requiring all students who attend the party to attend a Senate meeting as well was proposed by Polly Promoter, sophomore in public speaking and annoyance studies.

"This way, we'll get a great crowd at Senate meetings," she said. "We need more average student participation in Senate anyway."

"Let's look at this realistically. No one's going to come to Senate no matter what we do, so let's not even try," said Dissident in opposition to the with 'We figure $500,000 we can keep the beer flowing all night.'

- Landon Leader

Christopher Conscience, senior in saving the world studies, voiced concern about drinking during the party.

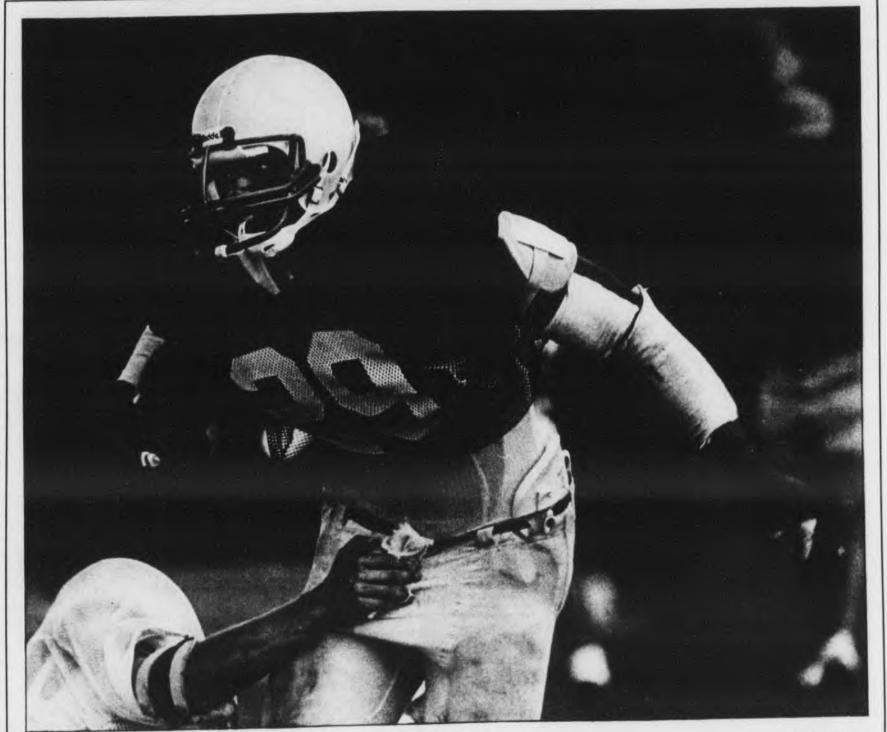

"Don't worry about that," said Landon Leader, sophomore in aggressive behavior and chairman of the Student Entertainment Committee. "We figure with $500,000 we can keep the beer flowing all night."

Conscience's protest of "That's not what I meant" was drowned out by the hurrahs and handclapping of Senate.

Tracy Thinkaboutit, graduate student in flower child behavioral systems, voiced the question of what will be done with the remaining

"It'll be put in an interest-bearing account, of course," said Senator. "That way, there will be money for future parties. After all, this senate has an obligation to future students as well as those already at the University."

Senate also heard first reading of a bill to provide party favors for the bash and will vote on the legislation at its next meeting.

Proposed track, 'Wefald Downs, to feature sheep racing, partying

By IMA HICK Urban Reporter

After the April 1 passage of parimutuel gambling by the Kansas Legislature, Riley County Commissioner Sam "the Poker Man" Spade proposed the construction of a racetrack to be built in Manhat-

The proposed track, to be named "Wefald Downs," will be built on the site of the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum. Coliseum planners are deliberating over a new site which would fall within the budget established by Kansas Board of Regents Chairman Ty T.

One alternative location for the coliseum would be in the downtown mall district, where city planners say plenty of area will be available after demolition of several downtown businesses, said Gary Gravis, athletic director.

The proposed track will be named after soon-to-be University President Jon Wefald, Spade said.

In an exclusive interview with the Cowlegian, Wefald said the naming of the racetrack is an honor and will be good for the University's academic standing.

"One goal I would have would be to make it the first- or second-best racetrack in the Big Eight and into one of the top 15 to 20 public racetracks in the country," Wefald

Spade said to provide competition with established tracks in Nebraska, the track would feature sheep racing.

Forrest Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he is pleased with the idea. Universityowned sheep will be entered in all races at the track to aid in student recruitment, Woods said.

"We haven't yet determined what will be used as bait for the sheep," Woods said. "Student volunteers may be used to chase the sheep down the track, or we may hire KU students to stand at the finish line.'

Gravis said money from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics would be used to build the track. The department is considering an athletic fee to be charged to all students at registration, and all students would be entitled to a season ticket.

Beer will be sold at the track, and a provision will be made in the concession plans to sell liquor upon passage of a liquor-by-the-drink law. The possibility of selling lottery tickets at the gate was also discussed at the city commission meeting.

Minors will be admitted with the proper false identification.

'Bullpup' chosen as coach

K-State adds pro wrestling

By I. BEN HYPMOTIZED 'Rasslin' Reporter

K-State Athletic Director Gary Gravis, in conjunction with the World Wrestling Alliance, announced Monday K-State will sponsor a professional wrestling team next year at the University. The team will be supervised jointly by the athletic department and the speech and drama department.

"We feel this is a big step forward in attempting to reaffirm K-State's position as a force to be laughed at in big-time collegiate sports," Gravis told the three reporters who had the guts to show up at the press conference.

World Wrestling Alliance President Vince McKann said he was happy K-State made the move to bring pro wrestling to the University.

"I was glad to see K-State drop men's tennis and women's softball, McKann said. "Wrestling is a much more respected sport than either of

"Just look at a man like Andre the watch - a man who weighs 500 pounds and is uglier than sin or some men and women in shorts hitting balls? The answer is fairly obvious,'

Gravis also announced former pro wrestling great Bullpup Bob Black will be the head coach of the new

"We feel like Bullpup will give us the veteran leadership we need to make this a top-notch squad in the years to come - providing the Bullpup doesn't die in the next two weeks," Gravis said of the 75-yearold Black, who until the announcement was still wrestling in the Kansas City area.

Black, sporting his familiar crew cut and cauliflower ears, said in barely coherent English he thought the K-State squad could meet the challenges which loom ahead.

"We have to teach the kids the basics - how to choke your opponent on the break while the referee has his back turned, how to yell obscenities to the old ladies in the front row, how Freak. Which would you rather to properly apply chicken blood," Black said.

> "Once we get those things learned, then we can move on to more advanced techniques - like stealing title belts from unsuspecting idiots,"

> One of Black's first announcements at the press conference was the signing of two "top-flight" recruits to letters-of-intent. Those signed by Black include 47-year-old Handsome Harry Case, 18-time WWA world champion, and Bulk Grogan, a bleach-blonde idiot from California who knows only one move Black's infamous leg drop.

Since no other Big Eight Conference schools have stooped so low as to include pro wrestling in their programs, K-State will be competing next season against such powers as Bodyslam Tech, Figure Four Institute of Technology, Lie-Cheat-Break Rules School for the Mentally Insane and the California School for Bleach Blonde Bums.

Legislature taking steps to prevent 'brain drain' builders, cheerleaders and other

By MUCK RAKER Staff Jerk

In order to plug the great Kansas brain drain, Kansas legislators are taking drastic steps.

Pret T. Yuppie, representative from Bigcity, said too many Kansas geniuses are moving to Texas and California because the states' names sound better than Kansas.

"In order to stop this drain of our most valuable resources, I propose we change the state name from Kansas to something more appealing, something Yuppyish like Chenin Blanc," Democrat said. "Who cares what it means as long as it sounds good and will keep our intelligent kids here." G.O. Pea, senator from Outwest, said the key to plugging the brain drain was sabotaging industries in other states. "This is off the record, mind you, but I think we ought to go to Texas and blow the hell out of General Dynamics, Texas Instruments and anything else that sounds technical," Pea said. "If I had my way, Silicon Valley would become part of the Pacific Ocean!"

Pea said destroying those industries would show industry leaders "what a sinful, wild place Texas is, and what kind of fruitcakes live in California.'

Is Kansas' agricultural image to blame for the brain drain? Senator Snob, from Richcity, said no industries would come to Kansas as long as farming was the No. 1 in-"Who wants to be number two? If I were president of a high-tech industry, I wouldn't want to move to a farm state. Too much legislation would favor the farmers and big industry would suffer," Snob said.

Maybe image is the problem here. How do people see Kansas? What do they think there is to do here?

According to Salley Devoid, professor of sociology, people perceive Kansas as a place to retire after they have amassed their fortunes in Texas or California.

"People want to come to Kansas to die," Devoid said. "They don't want to work here, they want to retire, go fishing and generally be unproductive here. But brain power is not the only thing leaving Kansas. Many body beautiful people are also deserting the sunflower state. "I like wanted to, you know, be where like the sun shines a lot and everybody's tan and, you know, things are like warm all year," said Bopsy Beautiful, former K-Stater.

The brain drain and beautiful people drain are having their effect on the Kansas economy.

"We're losing a lot of tax revenue to those jerks in Texas every year. And we spend a lot of money educating those ingrates," Pea said.

Marcos to be candidate

By PERKY PLAYITRITE Cub Reporter

Ferdinand Marcos is expected today to announce his candidacy for the position of Student Financial Aid director at the University.

Ferdie, a nickname he chose for students to call him, said he plans to make a trip to Manhattan as soon as Capital Airlines removes the cropdusting hoses from its shuttle planes.

Imelda "Emu" Marcos said she anticipated Ferdie would be the best candidate for the job because of his experience in manipulating funding from the U.S. government. She said Ferdie would initiate donation forms for alumni with certain undefinable risks if they did not give a percentage of their personal and business Ferdie said his goals as director would be to see that each student received what they deserved. He said women candidates for financial aid would be subject to Emu's scrutiny, but that male applicants would be given jobs at the office.

Ferdie said he also plans to 'screen" male applicants. "Of you're first-born males we will give Mercedes and cost plus 50 percent for educational use," Ferdie said. Proof of birth would be subject to a document provided by the individual, he said.

A local photocopy center said they have the completed and approved forms available and males may pick them up today.

Emu said women candidates must wear appropriate dress and show adequate proof of buyer awareness.

"I feel your women should be able to pass a test of spending $20,000 in Bloomies in 20 minutes," Emu said. Marcos said he is anticipating for financial aid post building an addition to the Fred Bramlage Coliseum to use as a home for his family and workers. Ferdie said the coliseum, because of its easy access to water and natural landscape, would be perfect for a natural wildlife reserve.

He said he planned to contact a certain Wichita architect to construct his addition because "cost is no object." University officials said they thought the Marcos entourage would add a needed dimension to the University and also cause enrollment to skyrocket to the top spot.

OSHA places fine on Union Carbide

Nine U.S. citizens die

in Mexicana jet crash

By The Associated Press

Kansas State University

WASHINGTON - The Occupational Safety and Health Administration, in the largest enforcement since its creation 15 years ago, fined Union Carbide Corp. almost $1.4 million Tuesday for 221 alleged violations at a West Virginia plant, including making workers "sniff" for leaks of deadly gases.

"They used to use canaries for that," Labor Secretary William Brock said, assailing the giant. chemical company for what he called a "willful disregard for health and safety" at its Institute, W.Va., plant over the past three years.

The alleged violations ranged from failing to keep proper records and making employees detect leaks of deadly gases to inadequate safety management systems for recognizing and correcting hazards.

Brock said the Labor Department last week sent the results of an intensive six-months wall-to-wall investigation of the Institute plant to the Justice Department for pursuing possible criminal violations.

Union Carbide has 15 days to appeal the civil fines, which total $1,377,700, the largest ever proposed. The case then would be litigated, first before an administrative law judge and then the three-member federal Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission.

The largest previous proposed fine levied by OSHA was $786,190 in 1979 against the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co. in Virginia. In a settlement reached in 1981, the penalties were reduced to

The company's president, Robert D. Kennedy, said Union Carbide will vigorously contest the allegations and charged that OSHA "grossly distorted the actual safety conditions and attitudes at the plant.

"Most of the alleged violations involve paperwork, no chemical process safety, operating integrity or

In Mexico City, U.S. Embassy spokesman Vincent Hovanec said. We can confirm that nine Americans were on the plane." He said this was based on reports from the airline, family and friends. Earlier reports had said only five Americans were among the dead in Mexico's worst air disaster.

Officials at a base camp improvised here, 31/2 miles southwest of the crash site, said the remains of 89 victims had been brought down from the mountain by 10 a.m. Tuesday. The airline said the flight recorder had been recovered.

Oil prices tumble, hit 8-year low

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Oil prices tumbled below $10 a barrel Tuesday, the lowest in more than eight years and one-third of the cost just four months ago, caused by bulging world supplies, warm weather and pessimism about the depressed market.

"It's impossible to say where it will all end," said Peter Beutel, an analyst with Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., a New York commodities futures firm.

The price of a standard 42-gallon barrel of West Texas Intermediate. the main U.S. crude and an important market indicator, fell to $9.90 in early dealings on the New York Mercantile Exchange, down from $10.42 Monday.

That compares to the pre-Easter price of $11.44 a barrel and the late November price of $31 a barrel, before the price slide began.

Oil prices had not fallen below $10 a barrel since 1977, when refiners paid an average of $9.55 a barrel for domestic crude oil.

Futures contract prices for refined products, such as gasoline and heating oil, also slumped Tuesday, furthering declines from Monday dealings.

Among contracts for April delivery, heating oil dropped nearly 25 percent to 33.30 cents a gallon, down from 42.78 cents on Monday, caused partly by the warm spring weather over much of the country. Unleaded gasoline fell nearly 2 cents to 34.80 cents a gallon

"There's nothing holding the market up," said Andrew Lebow, at the Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. securities firm.

On Monday, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba was quoted as saying in Abu Dhabi that oil prices would drop to $8 to $5 a barrel without cooperation among producers inside and outside the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"There is no bottom level that can arrest the downslide in prices." the official Emirates News Agency quoted Oteiba as saying.

U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington disagreed with that view.

'I think we're getting near the bottom," he said at a meeting with

CIA finances wars, former agent says

By TIM CARPENTER Editorial Page Editor

The federal government's desire to destroy every perceived threat to U.S. national security is responsible for instability in two-thirds of the world, a former agent for the CIA said Tuesday.

John Stockwell, who resigned from the CIA nearly 10 years ago after 13 years of service, said the U.S. government, with help from the CIA, currently plans and finances covert missions in more than 50 countries.

"The world's richest country has set out to break the poorest countries in the world," Stockwell said. "Society says it's OK - you are serving a country, impede the production

God and country.

"Too often we end up rationalizing and justifying these things for national security. We have slaughtered millions in the interest of national security.'

Most covert actions are undertaken to bolster mythical national security interests, not real threats to democratically elected governments, Stockwell said during the Lou Douglas Lecture in Forum Hall.

These acts of "destabilization" target specific facets of economic and social life in countries at odds with the U.S. government. Destabilization programs are intended to force investment capital out of and flow of goods in a country, eventually bringing a nation's economy to a grinding halt. However, attacks on a nation's economy are only a part of most CIA covert strategies. The indigent population is often made a target of aggression. "Terror is a major element in our program in Nicaragua," the decorated veteran said.

Stockwell said torture, under supervision of CIA case officers, is carried out in many nations. A common method of torture is to sexually attack or mutilate one family member while the rest of the family is forced to watch, he said.

Since 1981, the CIA has sponsored an army of ex-Somoza national guardsmen, commonly referred to as contras, in an effort to overthrow the Sandinista government in Nicaragua. More than 12,000 Nicaraguans, a vast majority of them civilians, have been killed in the fighting, Stockwell said. President Reagan is asking Congress for $100 million in aid for the contras. At least $177 million in direct aid has been given to the rebels, but the hidden cost of U.S. military exercises in the region add to that figure:

cuts, lower enrollment College reviews budget

By MELISSA BRUNE Staff Writer

Budget cuts resulting from declining enrollment at K-State are being made for the next two school years by the Kansas Legislature, said William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

He said President Duane Acker was told by the Legislature to divide the University budget cuts among the colleges and service facilities. Stamey called a special meeting on Tuesday with faculty members in the College of Arts and Sciences to discuss the budget cuts which will affect that college The College of Arts and Sciences, which has a working budget of about $20 million, will have the budget cut by $60,000 for the 1986-87 school year, he said. Budget cuts have not been decided for individual colleges for the 1987-88 year.

"Compared to the total budget, $60,000 doesn't seem like very much, but we spend all of our $20 million and still have unmet needs," Stamey

K-State's 1985-86 budget totaled about $183 million, of which $83 million was appropriated by the Assistant Provost Don Hoyt said the University budget for 1986-87 has been cut by almost $300,000 and the 1987-88 budget by almost $1 million. Stamey said he called the meeting to give faculty members a chance to ask questions and criticize current practices concerning allocation of available money.

Faculty members discussed such issues as student retention and recruitment. Stamey said he was aware the University has an "image problem," but said the meeting was not called to find immediate solutions to these problems; it was called to inform faculty of the cuts and allow them to respond.

'These cuts are not allocated proportionately and should not be," he said. "They should be allocated according to what is least harmful to the University."

Some suggestions concerning retention and recruitment included more vigorous use of the media to promote K-State, creating stronger associations for students through activities and individual departments. and the possibility of instituting mandatory residence hall living to give students a feeling they belong.

Thomas O'Connor, head of the Department of Modern Languages, said he believes better coordination and earlier recruiting contacts could help enrollment. He also said KSU Foundation officials need to make scholarship figures available earlier to incoming freshmen.

Navy helicopter crashes on carrier

NAPLES, Italy - A U.S. Navy helicopter crashed onto the flight deck of the aircraft carrier USS America on Tuesday, slightly injuring "some personnel," a Navy spokesman said.

Lt. Col. John Marchi, the spokesman, told The Associated Press he could not say how many people were injured or describe their injuries until their relatives had been notified.

"While there were no fatalities; some personnel received minor injuries," he said. He said he was not authorized to say to which squadron the helicopter belonged.

The USS America was one of three aircraft carriers that took part in 6th Fleet maneuvers that ended off the Libyan coast March 27. During the maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra, U.S. officials have said, Libyan forces fired on U.S. warplanes, and American forces retaliated against Libyan ships and an onshore radar site.

Marchi said the helicopter crashed onto the deck of the carrier at 7:33 p.m. (3:33 p.m. EST) while "engaged in logistic support" of the America. At the time, the carrier was anchored in Augusta Gulf, just north of Syracuse in southeastern Sicily.

Airport terminals bother prince

LONDON - After spending an hour wandering through a new terminal at Heathrow Airport, Prince Charles had a complaint.

"My wife and I have walked miles," said Charles, who with Princess Diana on Monday formally opened the half-mile long building.

"I have come to the conclusion that the distances that passengers or prospective passengers have to march through terminals is designed to ensure that when you climb into the aircraft you are so exhausted that you fall asleep instantly and feel no more pain for the rest of the flight," he said.

Terminal Four, which took 13 years and $307 million to design and build, opens to the public April 12. It should increase Heathrow's capacity from 30 million to 38 million passengers annnually by 1990 or 1991, said Sir Norman Payne, chairman of the British Airports Authority.

New fires flared Tuesday as crews battled blazes in tinder dry forests across the Southeast, where thousands of acres have been charred in the past week under rainless skies and unseasonable

"Every day it gets a little drier, with the fires burning with a little more intensity. It hasn't taken any spectacular leap, just a slow gradual buildup in a situation that's already pretty bad," said Bruce Jewell, spokesman for the regional office of the U.S. Forest Service in Atlanta.

Hundreds of fires have broken out in the past week in parts of Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia and Ohio. Outbreaks of grass and brush fires were reported over the weekend and Monday in parts of Michigan, western Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Missouri.

Jewell said "everything in the South except Florida has a very high fire danger."

Officials offer rewards for vandals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Rewards totaling $3,000 have been offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of vandals who defaced a recently dedicated Vietnam War memorial over the Mayor Richard L. Berkley, the Kansas City Crime Commission and Vietnam Veterans and Friends each announced Monday they were offering $1,000 rewards. The mayor said he would raise his reward

"This unbelievable act cannot go unnoticed. It's tragic that those who have died in service to their country should be the victims of such contemptible acts," Berkley said.

Vandals scrawled swastikas and slogans, including "Sucker Memorial," across the face of the memorial, which was dedicated in December but is not completed. Authorities said the memorial - a granite wall with the names of 369 missing and dead Kansas City area Vietnam War veterans - was defaced with a heavy black marker or grease pencil.

Police Sgt. Dennis Ullery said police have no leads in its investigation. He said $3,000 is a substantial reward for a nonviolent crime and "it could shake somebody loose."

Arthur Fillmore II, a Vietnam veteran who heads the group raising money to complete the memorial, said workers have tried several chemicals to remove the vandals' markings but none had worked.

Investigation leads to suspensions

LANSING — A deputy director at the Kansas State Penitentiary and a prison mechanic have been suspended with pay while allegations of misuse of state property and money are investigated, according to state officials.

Dale Bohannon, 37, one of two deputy administrators at the maximum security state prison, said Monday he was suspended March 23 but wasn't told the nature of the investigation.

State officials identified the mechanic who is under investigation as Buddy Burnett Jr. He was unavailable for comment.

Chuck Simmons, chief counsel for the Kansas Department of Corrections, said the Kansas Burea of Investigation and internal investigators at the prison started an inquiry about two weeks ago.

State official talks on Kansas economy

By TRINA KLOTZBACH Collegian Reporter

Recognizing and supporting companies and corporations currently residing in Kansas is a key solution to Kansas' economic woes, said Secretary of State Jack Brier Tuesday night.

Brier, speaking to members of Pi Sigma Epsilon, a business and marketing fraternity, said incentives need to be offered to companies already existing in the state so they will remain in Kansas.

"To survive and grow, we better recognize what we do have in Kansas now," Brier said. "There should be no reason for any company to leave this state if we actively seek to keep them here.'

The problem with this approach, Brier said, is that it isn't politically popular. Most politicians are more concerned with showing how many jobs they brought in and less with preserving the ones already existing, he said.

He also stressed the need to regionalize economic planning.

"If you're going to help a community, you've got to know the community," Brier said. "And the only way to know a community is to live there.'

Brier said one of the greatest shames is many Kansans graduating from the state's colleges and universities will leave the state for economic opportunity.

"The greatest export we have is our highly educated young people," he said. "We've got to change our

IRS volunteer offers tax form clarification

By DARREN MCCHESNEY Collegian Reporter

For students needing help sifting through the terminology of tax forms, there is relief in sight. Elias Saig, an IRS volunteer, helps students, faculty and staff at K-State make some sense out of all those forms.

Saig will be in the Student Government Services office in the first floor of the K-State Union on Mondays and Thursdays from 2 to 4 p.m. until April 15.

"I get training from the IRS every year, then I take a test. If you pass, you are eligible to do volunteer work," Saig said.

"My policy is to look for a longrun benefit," he said.

Saig said quite a few students fill out the 1040 EZ form. "If they're eligible for the EZ form, then that's what they should use," Saig said. The EZ form may be used if filing status is single; no exemptions are claimed for being 65 or over or for being blind; no dependents are claimed; taxable income is less than $50,000; only certain cash charitable contributions are deducted; only wages, salaries or tips are received; and interest income is $400 or less. If tips are received but not reported to the employer, a person may not be able to use the 1040EZ.

"Quite a bit of the questions have to deal with students on work study who have signed a form which states they want nothing withheld," Saig said. "What they don't understand is if nothing is withheld throughout the year then they'll have to pay it all at once at tax time.

"This year there have been more inquiries about the state form than the federal form," he

Kansas had a short form and a long form but the short form was abolished this year. People are not familiar with the long form, so there are more questions, Saig

Another common question is if everyone has to file. Those making under $3,430 do not have to file, but if they had anything withheld during the year, they must file to get it back.

Karen R. Kempton, 20, freshman in business administration, was killed Sunday morning when her car collided with another automobile at the junction of Kansas Highway 64 and U.S. Highway 54 in Pratt.

Kempton was reportedly attempting a left turn when her car collided with an oncoming car. A passenger in Kempton's car, Lori A. Zang, 19, was also killed. Both women were from Pratt.

Services for Kempton were held Tuesday at the First United Methodist Church in Pratt.

Survivors include Kempton's parents, Dr. Charles B. and Louise Kempton of Pratt; two brothers, Dr. Douglas Kempton of Salina and Bruce Kempton of Kansas City, Mo.; and grandparents Walter Lloyd Kempton of Concordia and Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Gile of Delphos.

A memorial for Special Olympics has been established in Kempton's name at Ayres-Calbeck Mortuary in Pratt.

K-State AIDS policy a small step forward

In the face of growing hysteria final approval. concerning acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the University AIDS Committee last week approved a final draft of a University AIDS policy.

If approved by William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, and President Duane Acker, the policy will establish guidelines to deal with students with AIDS or AIDSrelated diseases.

It addresses two of the chief concerns of the student population with regard to AIDS carriers - contact through athletics and through dormitory life.

In the revised draft of the policy allowing a student with AIDS to participate in athletics would be based on a physician's recommendation.

The policy also recommends that students who are carriers of AIDS should have a room to themselves during the time they reside in dormitories.

While the University's action dealing with concern about AIDS is applaudable, there remain some serious holes in the effectivness of the policy awaiting

A standing committee will establish guidelines to deal with communicable diseases that might become future issues on campus. The committee is necessary.

But in the same breath policymakers wiped out a standing committee that would have dealt with actual cases where AIDS victims could have voiced their concerns and gained confidential counseling.

The policy intends to protect AIDS victims from discrimination which would bar them from regular activities of campus life, but the elimination of a committee to consider individual cases decreases the ability of campus officials to respond to specific instances. It produces a situation where catering to individual need may become ambiguous.

With advances in medical research, we can only hope that a cure for AIDS and related diseases will be found and that policies such as this will become obsolete.

Defining Communism a tricky task

I would like to admit to the student body and faculty of K-State that my views on U.S. foreign policy in Central America clearly demostrate that I am a Communist.

According to a 1947 State Department intelligence report, Communists are those who believe "government has direct responsibility for the welfare of the people."

I believe that the U.S.-backed governments in Guatemala and El Salvador, which our president considers to be flourishing democracies, have failed to fulfill the responsibilities that those governments have for the welfare of their citizens.

Between 1954 and 1981 the Guatemalan government murdered more than 83,500 people, while in El Salvador 40,000 noncombatants have been murdered by government death squads in the last eight years alone.

Furthermore, I feel that the Sandinista regime has made some bona fide efforts to act on its alleged "responsibility to the welfare of the people."

It has instituted land-reform programs, it has drastically improved the literacy rate from 48 percent to 78 percent, and it has been chosen by the World Health Organization as a model country with respect to health care.

If this is what President Reagan means by "Communist aggression," then it is easy to see why the "dictator in designer glasses" has successfully eliminated any chance of popular support for the contras. But what's

SCOTT MILLER Guest Columnist

Human rights under the Sandinistas? Well, yes, there have been some violations (mainly in 1981 and 1982) but by no means are they comparable to the work of U.S.-backed regimes in Guatemala and El Salvador. Furthermore, the Sandinistas have successfully made some attempts to punish those respon-

Theirs is obviously not a perfect track record, but the Sandinistas appear to be much less of a threat to the protection of human rights than does any nation in an area accepting U.S. military aid (considering the facts on Guatemala and El Salvador, as well as the fact that the contras operate out of Honduras with the approval of the Honduran/U.S. military).

The experienced reader should clearly see by now that to defend the Sandinistas in any way or to denounce the "freedom fighters" who routinely kill, rape and torture civilians is obviously an open admission of my Communistic preferences.

THE GALL OF THAT MARCOS IS UNBELIEVABLE

But just in case there might be an inexperienced reader out there, let me make it very simple. The same document I cited earlier also refers to Communism as a doctrine which threatens "our raw materials."

As I mentioned, Sandinista land reforms have successfully placed much of the productive land in the hands of the people who work it, and away from former Somoza elites, while in El Salvador 2 percent of the population owns 60 percent of the land.

Obviously the $290 million of U.S. aid in 1984 has helped the Salvadorans resist the 'ever rising tide of Communist suppression," by keeping "our raw materials" in our hands and pockets and away from those greedy Central American peasants and Communists. By state department standards I am undisputably a Com-

But why do I dwell on this 37-year-old scrap of lunacy? Because it has remained one of the primary bulwarks of U.S. foreign policy since 1949. I hope "Communists" and other forces of subversion like myself can change that policy, so the Central American people will not be doomed to another 37 years of "democracy."

Who knows?

I heard a rumor that at least half of the House of Representatives are Communists, of the proposed chemistry and biochemistry building will be of Regents will be approving a tribute would be to name the building after President Duane Acker.

Scott Miller is a sophomore in English.

Acker, a fervent supporter of the $10.3 million project, will leave the presidency this summer. Acker said recently he is pleased the project is going forward because the research and instructional facility is needed if the University is to meet the demands of faculty and students.

The Department of Chemistry will occupy two-thirds of the building and the Department of Biochemistry will claim the remaining portion. The native limestone building will be located south of King Hall.

Past presidents are likely

In the fall of 1988, construction sources when the need arises to name a new campus building. McCain Auditorium, honoring complete and the Kansas Board President James McCain, who served from 1950-75, and Jardine name for the building. A fitting Terrace Apartments, named after William Jardine, president from 1918-25, are just two examples.

> While one former president, Thomas Will (1897-99), does not have a building named after him, Acker has served the fourthlongest tenure at the University's helm and his teaching and administrative achievements far exceed those of Will.

K-State should honor Acker for his years of service and dedicate the structure as a lasting memory to a president who has made a significant contribution to K-State.

MAR THE BUFFALO NEW!

Re: Mike Riley's column, "Nicaragua vote demands foresight," in the March 20 Col-

Come on Mike, your hyperbole and scare tactics sound as unrealistic as President Reagan's. Your analogy between pre-war Germany and Nicaragua is like comparing Gene Smithson (former Wichita State basketball coach) and Jack Hartman.

There is no possible comparison. A more fair comparison would be to compare you and Reagan to former Sen. Joseph McCar-

Germany was a highly industrialized country with a large resource base and a large population. It is naive to think Nicaragua is capable of invading and occupying any country, or upsetting the world balance of power as Nazi Germany did. Your denouncement of appeasement seems hardly applicable to Nicaragua. Their internal problems dominate their national agenda. An offensive or aggressive act from Nicaragua is out of the question.

It is clear that if an overt threat ever arose the United States would quickly resort to military force to quash it. The Soviets also realize the United States would never tolerate a threat to its national security. Therefore, the Soviet role in the region is low

What happened to diplomacy? Why is the United States using military action first instead of last? Reagan's use of special envoy Phillip Habib appears to be more of a political move designed to win congressional votes than a diplomatic effort to build peace.

The Latin American people are pressing for negotiations. While they do not like a Marxist government in their midst, they are concerned that a unilateral U.S. intervention would be even worse for regional stability and the U.S. image.

However, what everyone is forgetting is why Congress cut off covert military aid to the contras in the first place. Lawmakers were angered by the U.S. mining of Nicaraguan harbors and the disclosure of a Central Intelligence Agency manual in Nicaragua containing instructions on the selective use of assassination - contrary to

Definitions wrong

Re: Mike Riley's column, "Nicaragua vote demands foresight" in the March 20 Col-

It surprises me that, as a political science major, Riley doesn't understand the differences between democracy and Com-

Democracy is a political system where the people share the power. Communism is an economic system where the people share the wealth. In fact, because wealth can buy power, true democracy may be best achieved by Communism. Riley seems to think that these terms are opposites. Well Mike, the opposite of democracy is dictatorship, and the opposite of Communism is capitalism.

This misconception is followed by many others. The military spending in Nicaragua is not unexpected considering they are starting from scratch and are outnumbered and outgunned by the hostile countries surrounding them.

Given the fear of a U.S. invasion and the ongoing contra war, we are to blame for their military buildup, so we can't use this as an excuse for funding the contras. The United States used to spend up to 50 percent of its budget on our military during peacetime, which makes the 40 percent of Nicaragua's budget going for military uses hardly unusual.

Your mentioning of Nazi Germany is very fitting, considering that your so-called research brings to light the classic rightwing propaganda that Adolph Hitler used so

Remember that Hitler planted the fear of Communism so deep into the minds of the people that they were blind to the horrors going on around them. This is very dangerous

Unfair fee question

Re: Catherine Sayler's column, "Fee survey of questionable merit," in the March 27 Collegian:

As one of the individuals who was questioned as part of the athletic fee survey, I would like to voice my agreement with Sayler's comments in her column regarding the implementation of an athletic fee.

I remember specifically the question that asked if an athletic fee should be charged which would allow all students to attend games free. I answered, "Yes, if students could attend games free.

The problem with my answer is quite apparent. Because of the constraints of quantitative research, my answer would be part of the 77 percent who responded "Yes." However, in reality, my answer should be "No," because it is impossible for all students to attend all sporting events.

With all respect to the students who conducted this research, I believe this question must be viewed as invalid. Responses were based on the condition that all students could attend all sporting events free; a condition that does not, and will not, exist.

It appears that the fee assessment question cannot be used to evaluate the current student position because it presupposes a situation that is impossible. I echo Sayler's recommendation that expert opinion be obtained before any decisions are made based on this student survey.

'Meatout' ill-timed

Editor,

Re: Tom Schultes column, "Reaction to meatout disconcerting," in the March 24 Col-

Is Tom Schultes just trying to get a rise out of K-State Aggies? His editorial made few valid points but drew some invalid conclu-

Any media that made special mention of Bob Barker's "Great American Meatout" was painted as the "reactionary fringe." Does Schultes, business editor, realize Kansas is the No. 1 meat packing and beef producing state in the nation? Kansas media have a duty to report events that affect our economy and it's not reactionary to comment against staged events that can harm that economy.

Schultes does raise an interesting question as to the justifiability of canceling "The Price is Right" on meatout day. That, we'll grant, could be seen as reactionary and not in keeping with traditions of access to information and the marketplace of ideas. WIBW-TV's George Logan could more effectively have scheduled an editorial rebuttal in conjunction with news programing. However, the spot cancellations of Barker's game show are as easy to justify as his attack on all meat products.

In criticizing Logan, you imply he puts himself above the knowledge of the America Heart Association an the American Cancer Society. Not so. As the next sentence points out, "both organizations recommend people eat lean meat." Does Schultes edit the recommendations to parenthetically add "such as fish"? No one is suggesting you eat other than lean meat.

Finally, it would be small help to Kansas agriculture if those on the Barker Diet turn to soybeans, fish or poultry, and to imply no harm done because all food comes from agriculture "doesn't wash" in this state. A single, though nationwide event like the meatout, can become more than just a glitch in the market if it has the effect its backers (and Barkers) hope for.

And any short-term cut in demand can have long-term effects because slaughter is not halted on any meatout day, and that means more meat in the pipeline for consumers. One effect could be that red meat will become a little cheaper so some wouldbe vegetarians may fall to a tempting price.

I appreciate the concerns raised with respect to program cancellations, but I believe all Kansas media were certainly justified in pointing to the ill-timed, illconceived "Great American Meatout" in a negative way.

Re: The letters about Michael Florian Jilg's paintings, etchings and drawings in the Union Art Gallery:

Upon going to the art gallery, I was surprised to find that something seemed to be missing on the painted figures - namely clothes. I am not pleased in the least with the Union for putting up this so-called art, which is in reality garbage.

Contrary to what was said in defense of such an action, no one has the right to put up the display in public. It is often said that those who produce and admire such art have a right to do so.

But what about the rights of those walking into the gallery not knowing what is on display being faced with nude paintings? My right not to have this art is also important.

The Union should (although they no doubt won't) have those paintings removed. If I want Playboy-type pictures I'll buy some. Can't the image of our art gallery reflect something better than what is there now?

Re: R. Porter Brock's letter, "Artwork offensive." in the March 26 Collegian:

For those who didn't read Brock's letter, Brock has contempt for Michael Florian Jilg's display, and says that it is "in extremely poor taste and should be removed from the gallery...removed from the premises of K-State.

If that isn't enough, Brock also calls the exhibit "pornography" and says that it could be "conducive to acts of immorality."

Brock is certainly entitled to an opinion, but before allegations of this nature are made and a person decides to sit in judgment on another's work, he should be familiar with the profession that he degrades. Obviously, Brock is not too familiar with art or artistic intent. I am sure that Jilg's intent was not to debase womanhood or the human body but rather to extol and present the body as an artform to be viewed and appreciated.

Some of the most renowned artists in the world use the human body as their subject. Everyone is familiar with the works of

If a display such as Jilg's is conducive to acts of immorality, it is only conducive to people like Brock, who cannot view the human body as a thing of beauty but see it rather as a repulsive, pornographical entity.

Re: R. Porter Brock's letter, "Artwork offensive," in the March 26 Collegian:

As a student at K-State I feel lucky that I have the opportunity to be exposed to a variety of art through the Union Art Gallery. It offends me when a narrow-minded person, who uses a dictionary to define pornography, tries to deny me this privilege. If all you see in the art currently being exhibited is nudity, maybe you should take a closer look at your own morals. Art is more than what is seen on the surface of a canvas; it is also a medium for the expression of ideas and concepts.

If you don't care for the art fine, that's your opinion, but let it stay your opinion, and not a rule to which everyone should conform.

The United States has been put in great danger by the establishment of a new Soviet client state on our continent. Congress is aware of the present Soviet control over the Sandinista government in Nicaragua and of its aim to export revolution, drugs and terrorism to further threaten and deliberately challenge the security of the United States.

This openly Communist government has stolen the ideals of the original Nicaraguan revolution and is in the process of terrorizing the Nicaraguan population, 90 percent of whom now oppose the Sandinista dictators, according to Pete Bertie, a Canadian journalist, in the March 21 edition of the Washington Inquirer.

According to Adolfo Calero, a commander with the Nicaraguan Democratic Force and an opponent of the Sandinista government, at least 20,000 freedom-loving Nicaraguans are determined to regain their country despite the prospect of combat with sophisticated Soviet-bloc advisers and weapons.

Americans for Biblical Government agree with President Reagan that the United States has a moral obligation as well as a legal obligation to assist the contras, in so doing to bring about the defeat of the totalitarian oppression or a negotiated political solution before it becomes necessary to commit American troops to our southern borders.

We sense the impending disaster we are bringing on ourselves and our Western allies by treating Soviet hostility as lightly as Slattery did on March 20.

We look forward soon to the decisive nonpartisan action taken by Slattery to alleviate this fateful peril, that together we can live out the sentiment stated by President John Kennedy: "We are a people who will pay any price, make any sacrifice, travel any distance to protect freedom on this earth."

Traffic council to require parking permits at rec complex

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

Beginning July 1, 1986, students will be required to have a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, according to discussion during an open hearing

"One hundred thousand dollars came out of the funds (from parking ticket fines)," said Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police Department. "We felt at the committee (Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations) that to go to such an expense, there should be some kind of return on the investment to maintain the lot.'

The cost of the special permit will be $5 per semester and $10 per year, which includes summer.

It is not necessary to buy a special permit if a person already possesses a valid student or faculty parking permit, Beckom said.

'That will make available certain parking lots at a reduced price and allow the other permits to be valid in those certain lots," he said.

Tax dollars are not used to build and maintain the parking lots.

"Ours is a self-sustaining system," Beckom said, referring to the need for funds. "The lot users are basically paying for what we have. These are not legislated funds. There aren't any tax dollars spent for the plans to build new lots, renovation of the existing lots, maintenance and the enforcement of the lots."

The department wants to assure the public the funds from fines are being spent on the maintenance and enforcement of the parking lots, Beckom said.

"The effort here was to clarify to parking fines) are not utilized for expenses in other areas of the department," he said.

Another change is that "bicycles will not be permitted to park inside of buildings, or be secured to trees, shrubs, railings, light posts or signposts," according to Section IV, part F, of the proposed changes to the Traffic and Parking Regulations for fiscal year 1987

"This was rewritten and updated because of the cost factor in the damage of the building and the maintenance when a bicycle is lockthe public that those funds (from ed to a railing inside of a building," building needs to be evacuated for any reason.

Parking bicycles inside buildings "has limited our ability to safely vacate a building in case of a fire or other emergencies," Beckom said.

Another change is that "the University assumes no responsibility for the care or protection of a vehicle or its contents while the vehicle is operated or parked on University property," according to the proposed changes to the Traffic and Parking Regulations for 1987:

It is also a safety hazard if the creasing on hit and run accidents or people who have had their car damaged in the parking lot," Beckom said. "When you park (in the parking lot) the liability rests with the individual who causes the accident.'

Other changes include excusing violations by visitors, unless the car is parked illegally, such as in a handicapped parking space or a 24-hour reserved stall; and a vehicle which is not headed into a stall is illegally parked and will be subject to payment of a fine.

Senate committee OKs malpractice legislation

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday endorsed for passage a proposal to place a $1 million limit on the amount victims of medical malpractice can be compensated for their injuries.

The bill, which advances to the Senate for debate later this week, contains a provision which allows supplement benefits to be awarded when medical expenses exceed the $1 million maximum. However, the bill is more conservative than the version which passed the House several weeks ago.

Endorsement by the committee came on an unrecorded voice vote, but there were several votes cast against the measure.

The Senate committee changed the bill to place a $3 million cap on the amount the Health Care Stabilization Fund will spend compensating victims of a doctor's malpractice for their medical bills.

Committee action followed several days of discussion and a heated exchange Tuesday between Senate President Robert V. Talkington, who is a strong supporter of caps on awards, and Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita and an opponent of limiting victims's rights to recover for malpractice.

"All we're doing is kowtowing to the insurance companies and giving them everything they want," Feleciano said. "What we need is insurance reform, not tort reform."

Talkington, R-Iola, responded that the insurance industry was experiencing a nationwide crisis and to challenge them could have serious repercussions.

'You'll just reform them right out of the state," Talkington warned.

That's the weakest damn argument, and I'm sick of hearing it,"

Feleciano snapped. The bill enacts a $1 million cap on economic damages awarded by a jury and a $250,000 ceiling on noneconomic damages called pain-and-

A jury would not be restricted by the limitations and it would be possible for a jury to award someone $5 million. However, that victim will recover just $1 million, unless he can prove his medical expenses will exceed the limit.

To do so would require a victim to return to the judge who presided at the trial and show that the amount allotted for medical expenses under the $1 million cap will not cover future medical bills

The bill permits a structured settlement rather than requiring a lump-sum payment to a victim. According to Senate committee changes, the Health Care Stabilization Fund would purchase an annuity, which would pay off the victim over a set number of years.

Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City, said it was wrong to mix future economic damages with future medical benefits. He said the bill was flawed because the family of a victim would lose all annuity benefits upon the death of the victim.

"What we have is a co-mingled annuity," Steineger said, noting that unless someone already had life insurance, it would impossible to obtain protection for dependents after suffering medical malpractice in-

Royals cut veteran shortstop

By The Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. - Shortstop Onix Concepcion, who lost his starting job to the weak-hitting Buddy Biancalana late last season, was cut Tuesday by the Kansas City Royals.

The World Series champions said they have asked waivers on Concepcion for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release, while aquiring shortstop Argenis "Angel" Salazar from the New York Mets for lefthanded pitcher Tony Ferreira.

Salazar, 24, who was a non-roster player in the Mets' spring training camp, was placed on the Royals' major league roster.

"Our reports on Salazar are such that we believe he has the ability to strengthen our club at the shortstop position," said John Schuerholz, the team's executive vice president and general manager.

Salazar, a Venezuelan who signed with the Montreal Expos in 1980, spent his first five seasons in their system, including a total of one year on the big league roster. He has a .166 average in 116 major league games, but was hitting .333 with one run batted in this spring.

The Royals also sent outfielder Dave Leeper, pitcher Dave Cone and catcher Brian Tolberg to their minor league camp.

Concepcion, 27, has been in the Royals system since 1976 and had a .238 average in a little over four seasons with the major league club.

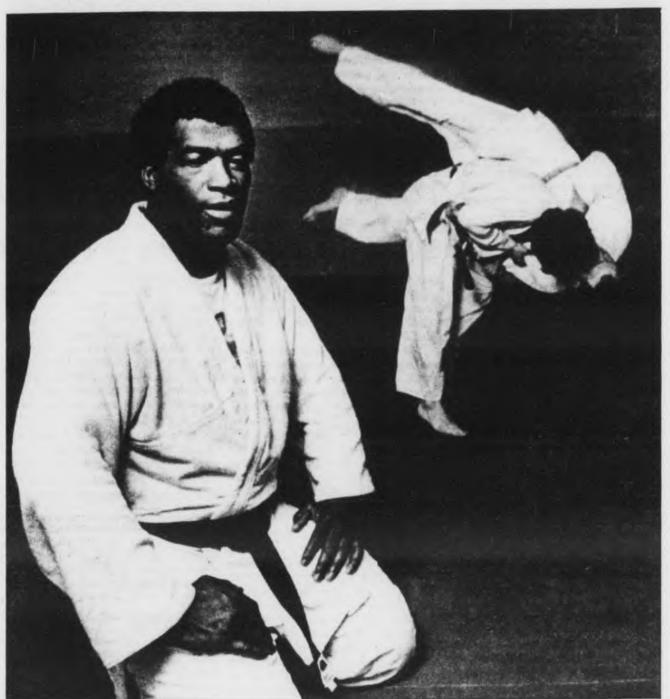

He hit .282 in 1984, including .370 after the All-Star break, but slumped last season and finished at .204. He started 108 games, but in the closing months of the season, when the Royals were in the thick of the American League West pennant race, he was supplanted by Bian-

Biancalana hit only .188 during the regular season, but raised his average to .278 for the World Series. As a result of his World Series performance, Biancalana became a celebrity of sorts and made an appearance on the David Letterman television show.

Concepcion, whose 21 errors last season were the most on the club, appeared in three series games but did

This spring, Concepcion was hitting .292 with one RBI, while Biancalana has a .186 average and has driven in two runs.

Ferreira, 23, was the Royals' thirdround choice in the June free-agent draft in 1981. He has a 43-41 mark with a 2.78 earned run average in five minor league seasons.

Bradie Jones, Manhattan, will travel to Hawaii in May to defend his heavyweight masters title in the National Judo Tournament. Jones, who teaches judo lessons on campus, has participated in the sport for 21 years.

Local man hopes for return to national judo tournament

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER Collegian Reporter

A sport that began as a form of self-defense has become a regular part of Bradie Jones' life.

Jones, head custodian at Bluemont Elementary School, has been participating in judo for approximately 21 years. Those years of long, hard practice paid off last year when he won the heavyweight masters division at the National Judo Tournament in Detroit.

This year he will try to defend his title at the national tournament, May 2-4, in Hawaii.

Competing in tournaments is something that is very familiar to Jones who estimates he has "pronaments", since his interest in the

"My father used to wrestle with all of us kids," he said. "That's where my interest started.

"I tried judo for reasons of selfdefense," Jones said. "I wanted to protect myself from the neighborhood bully, and I thought this was the best way to do that."

Jones practices 11/2 to 2 hours a day either at home in his basement or in the backyard. He and his coach, Isaac Wakabayashi, instructor in electrical engineering and computer science, teach judo classes on Tuesday and Thursday evenings on campus. The nature of judo makes it more bably competed in 300-400 tour- difficult to prepare for competitions than a lot of sports, Wakabayashi

> "It certainly takes longer to train than some other sports - there's no question about that," he said. "The skill level is different. In basketball, you can go out and compete with a minimal amount of practice, but judo is different. You must learn to protect yourself."

In addition to preparing for the national tournament physically, Jones must also prepare financially. A fund-raising committee to help finance the trip for Jones has been established by teachers, students and parents of students at Bluemont Elementary School.

KC strong enough to take title again

After suffering through years of frustration, the Kansas City Royals finally did it last year - they won the World Series.

Royals fans throughout the Midwest were in a state of jubilation after the victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. Kansas City could finally lay claim to the title "World Champions.'

So now what can the Royals do for an encore?

How about the obvious? Win again

And it isn't out of the question, This year's Royals are shaping up as good or possibly better than last year's championship team. All the ingredients are there for a possible repeat as champions.

Pitching carried the Royals through last season, and will be expected to play a major role in the team's success this year as well. Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen (20-6, 2.87 ERA) is a proven performer as are other starters Charlie Leibrandt, Danny Jackson, Mark Gubicza and Buddy Black.

No staff in baseball can match the top-to-bottom quality the Royals have in their starting rotation.

The Royals have yet to make a final decision on the members of the relief pitching staff. Four-time Fireman of the Year Dan Quisenberry and Steve Farr are the only relievers sure to return.

A return to form by former staff ace Dennis Leonard would bolster a pitching staff that already may be the best in baseball. Leonard has been out of action for the past two seasons with a serious knee injury.

In spite of the team's success, Royal hitters had a terrible time at the plate last year. Kansas City finished 13th of 14 American League teams in batting averages and runs scored last year.

But that should improve this year. The two big reasons are outfielders Lonnie Smith and Willie Wilson. Both Smith and Wilson are lifetime .300 hitters who had off seasons in 1985. Smith, who came over from the Cardinals in a mid-season trade, batted only .257 while Wilson finished at

Smith and Wilson, the number one and two batters in the Royal order, are the keys to the Kansas City attack. If Smith and Wilson can get on base, it opens things up for the big RBI men in the Royal line-up -George Brett and Hal McRae Brett is coming off one of his best seasons ever. Maybe the best player in baseball, Brett hit .335 last season with 30 home runs and 112 RBIs.

TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

But as Brett goes, so go the Royals. If Brett can come near duplication of those performances this year, the Royals may seek and destroy the opposition. If he doesn't come close, Kansas City may be in trouble.

Another key for the Royals will be whether 40-year-old designated hitter McRae can come back for one more season of productivity. If McRae could somehow come up with 70 RBIs this year, it would help tremendously.

The Royals are hoping for improvement from right fielder Darryl Motley, whose batting average plummeted 62 points from 1984. They'd better get it, too, because Motley's back-up Pat Sheridan, was released Friday.

Another solid year from first baseman Steve Balboni - say, 32 homers and 90 RBIs - would be nice too. If second baseman Frank White could hit .260 and provide 60 RBIs to the attack, this would be helpful as

As for shortstop Buddy Biancalana, a .230 batting average would be a great triumph indeed.

So there you have it - Royals

For my brash prediction of the spring, I say the Royals are going to do it again. Repeat World Champions. If I'm right, remember you read it here first. If I'm wrong, feel free to forget.

Gubicza leads Royals to win

Jazz band to present 'mixed bag' concert

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

The KSU Concert Jazz Ensemble will begin its official spring showcase with a free concert at 8 p.m. Thursday in Union Forum

"The music, in terms of style that is presented, will really be a mixed bag," said director Bill McFarlin. Included will be jazz rock and big band swing, in addition to well-known standards. McFarlin is also the executive administrator of the National Association of Jazz Educators, headquartered in Manhattan.

The concert will feature a guest artist, professional drummer Scott Robinson.

'Scott came to the attention of the country at age 9, at the convention of the National Association of Jazz Educators in Miami," McFarlin said.

"My father was a percussionist, so we always had a drum set around the house," Robinson said in a phone interview Tuesday.

"When I was 11 years old, I knew that (playing the drums) was what I was going to do. It was all that I was interested in," Robinson said.

Robinson began working professionally in the Kansas City area at 12.

'Scott broke all previous precedents by joining the Toshiko Akiyoshi/Lew Tabakin Orchestra as a drummer at the age of 17," McFarlin said. It is one of the most famous bands in the coun-

Robinson attributes his success to his father, listening and playing, and Carmell Jones

"I give about 60 percent to my father, 30 percent to listening on the streets and going to jam sessions and the rest to Carmell Jones," Robinson said.

Robinson said he does not have particular person he idolizes; he listens to everyone.

"I'd love to play with Freddie Hubbard, Ornette Coleman or Stan Getz," Robinson said.

Robinson is studying piano composition at the University of Missouri Conservatory of Music in Kansas City. After he finishes school, he said, "I want to move back to New York so that I can play with as many of the heavyweights as I can.

"I'd really like to have a degree," Robinson said. "That will give me security, and right now, I'm saving money so I don't have to worry about living in the streets (of New York).

Robinson said that he likes most kinds of music, but does not care for country and western.

"The only form of music that I'm not really crazy about is country and western," Robinson said.

The Concert Jazz Ensemble will also perform from 11 to 11:45 a.m. Saturday in the Union Courtyard during Open House festivities.

City overrules petition for street improvement

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER Collegian Reporter

Manhattan City Commissioners approved a resolution allowing day care centers in areas zoned as general business district Tuesday night, which could clear the way for a proposed center in the Nautilus Towers in Aggieville.

Conversely, commissioners rejected a petition for improvements from property owners along Claflin Avenue between Wreath Avenue and Meadowbrook Lane. The petition included a request for a new street, curb and gutter, storm drainage and sidewalks. Commissioners rejected the request due to the apportionment estimated by the petitioners, which asked the city to pay 95 percent of the $173,000 estimate, leaving 5 percent for property owners.

Speaker reviews black women's status

By DAN SMITH Collegian Reporter

Today's successful black woman is from all over the United States, said

"Many black women today support a family with an income of less than $11,000," she said. "They do this with no help at all from the male spouse."

Currently, assistance for these women is near but there is a lot of work to be done, she said.

Rosa Parks, the black woman whose refusal to sit in the back of a bus in 1955 sparked civil rights protests, was a primary mover in helping black women start their climb to respectability, Russell-McCloud

Another area in which black women are trying to gain respectability is education, she said.

"Black women have closed the gap in some areas of education. In the early 1970s, we were kind of banned or discouraged from graduating,"

she said.

At the beginning of World War II, black women were forced to move into factories and help with producing ammunition, Russell-McCloud said. Most of them worked from sunup until sundown and were excluded from economic gain.

"Forty-nine percent of those were single parents," she said.

Russell-McCloud said she wanted to point out that the status of black women in the marketplace needs to change, and the only way to do this is to be aggressive, as Rosa Parks was

Students design ag machinery for competition ject with the use of visual aids, he

By PAT HUND Collegian Reporter

Two teams of agricultural engineering students have designed and incorporated modification changes in agricultural machinery in preparation for upcoming regional competition.

One team of four students has designed an air-shock suspension system on a boom sprayer which may provide a more even spraying application.

"The more control that the boom has will provide a more accurate application of chemicals," said Gary Sweany, senior in agricultural engineering and team member.

The team members are comparing computer data on the suspension system to the theoretical possibility of how the system should work, said Allan Burk, senior in agricultural engineering and team member.

The suspension system is tested with a sonar box attached to the boom which measures the actual displacement to the ground through computer analysis, Burk said.

Burk said the suspension system is fairly accurate when compared to the computer simulation the students projected before doing actual field The other five-member team has designed a system on a square baler which will produce bales in nearly identical lengths

"Because of the problems in the uniformity of bale length, we have made a system that measures the length of the wire instead of the length of the hay bale," said Brad Briggs, senior in agricultural engineering and team member.

In this system, the length of the wire is measured with an electronic counter instead of a mechanical device called a starwheel which is used to measure the length of the bale, Briggs said.

Daniel Clarkson, senior in agricultural engineering and the originator of the idea for the design, said he's had to haul hay most of his life and he was tired of the variation in the length of the hay bales.

"I saw the problem in the existing mechanism and I decided to incorporate a system that would measure the wire length to improve uniformity in bale length," Clarkson said.

Briggs said his team has filed a patent disclosure with the University Research Foundation to see if it would be feasible to apply for a pa-

The design and modification for the two projects began last semester when the students enrolled in a class called "The Design of Agricultural Machinery," said Mark Schrock, associate professor of agricultural engineering and one of two professors who jointly taught the course. Stanley Clark, professor of agricultural engineering, also taught

"The students were taught to design their projects in the fall and have a prototype built in the spring semester," said Schrock, who is advising the students with their pro-

On April 4, the two teams will enter their projects in the Mid-Central Design Competition in St. Joseph, Mo., competing against teams in a four-state region including Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

The projects will be judged in a written report submitted by the students emphasizing the calculations, methodology, mechanical design, electronic circuits, and a complete set of plans describing their designed modifications, Schrock said.

In addition, the team members will give an oral presentation of their pro-employee safety," he said. "In the brief time that we've had to review the complaint, we know that there are such 'willful' citations as the omission of an employee's Social Security number.'

Kennedy called Brock's allegations that plant officials were complacent about the health and safety of their workers "an outrageous misrepresentation of the truth."

OSHA officials acknowledged that the size of the proposed fines represented a major change in its enforcement policies from the first five years of the Reagan administration. The job safety agency was created by Congress with its enactment of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. The agency actually came into being in 1971.

Previously, during Reagan's term in office, the agency lumped alleged violations together and sought one fine to cover each category, a practice widely criticized by labor and public interest groups. Against Carbide, OSHA is seeking the maximum penalty for each specific instance of violation.

"Some people in this country simply have an attitude that a few accidents here and there are the price of production," Brock said, adding there was an "absence of motivation" on the part of Carbide for protecting the health and safety of its employees.

"I just don't think this country thinks like that any more," he said. "We will impose the full penalties of the law on those who blatantly or repeatedly violate safeguards necessary to protect American workers."

The Institute plant is the same facility where a tank of aldicarb oxime and methylene chloride ruptured last August, spewing a cloud of gas into the air that hospitalized six workers and sent 135 area residents to emergency rooms.

OSHA last October proposed fines of $32,100 against Carbide in connection with the leak but settled the case last month for a payment of $4,400 by the company.

Methylene choride and aldicarb oxime, when combined with methyl isocyanate at the Insitute plant, are used to make a commercial pesticide called Temik.

Methyl isocyanate is the same substance that killed more than 2,000 people in a December 1984 chemical accident at Union Carbide's plant in Bhopal, India.

Lebow said Oteiba's comments about $5 oil, along with the recent warm weather, contributed to the market's bearish mood. As temperatures rise, demand for heating oil falls off.

The current slump began with a glut in world supplies that was already putting downward pressure on prices late last year.

In December, OPEC announced it would increase production to preserve its "fair market share," abandoning previous attempts to support the market price through restrained production.

The decision sent prices into another tailspin, leading OPEC members to call for renewed cuts in output by both the cartel and non-OPEC members such as Britain and

But at a 9-day-long meeting in Geneva that ended March 24, members of the 13-nation cartel could not win agreement from nonmembers on production cuts, and failed to devise a strategy for cutting its own production.

"The bottom line is, traders don't see anything to hold back prices from falling. There's just too much oil out there," Beutel said.

AT JOHNSON COUNTY COMMUNITY COLLEGE

Now that you've got an education, how about paralegal. It's one of the country's fastest growing fields. The number of paralegals employed nation-wide will double in the next 10 years. That's 50,000 new jobs that currently pay from $15,000 to $30,000.

To meet the growing need for paralegals, JCCC has created an accelerated certificate program. Starting with an intensive twomonth session this June, you can earn a certificate by December. The program is open to anyone with a two- or four-year degree who meets admission requirements.

Application deadline for the first accelerated certificate program is May 1, so don't delay. Call the JCCC Admissions Office at 469-3803 for application information.

House sends resolution to Senate, seeks study of attorneys' fee limits

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House passed Tuesday and sent the Senate a resolution urging the state Supreme Court to study possible limits on attorneys' contingent fees, and a bill to allow some victims of drinkingrelated traffic accidents to receive state crime reparation money.

The attorneys' fees resolution, which won adoption on a 123-0 vote, asks the Supreme Court and the Kansas Judicial Council to complete a study of the fees by the 15th day of the 1987 legislative session.

The measure was offered in place of a bill that would restrict the fees by law, which the House returned to committee last week.

Contingent fees are a percentage of settlements attorneys keep in return for agreeing to work on a case without any other guarantee of pay. Rep. Stephen Cloud, R-Lenexa, promoted the bill, which would have set immediate limits on the attorneys' share of settlements. He contended high-percentage contingent fees help drive up the cost of liability insurance.

However, the House voted 65-46 to return the proposal to the House Federal and State Affairs Committee last Thursday after the bill hit floor opposition from a number of lawmakers who are lawyers.

The accident payment bill, which passed 124-0, would apply to victims of accidents in which another person was later convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

The measure also would require that any profits from the sale of books, magazines, movies and television presentations about crimes that occur in Kansas to be paid to the Crime Victims Reparations Board. Other bills the House passed today

- Permit prosecutors to use videotaped statements from children, who are victims of crimes, at preliminary hearings. In addition, the proposal requires that the child victims who have testified on videotape not be subject to crossexamination from defense attorneys. The bill, which advanced to the Senate, is aimed at eliminating loopholes in a law regarding those situations which passed last year.

- Amend the state's Uniform Controlled Substances Act to add three so-called designer drugs to a category known as Schedule I, which includes drugs that have no known medical use but great potential for abuse. The three drugs that would be added to the list are MDMA, MPPP and PEPAP. The measure returns to the Senate for consideration of House amendments.

Public to vote on wager issue

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA - The Senate Wednesday adopted two resolutions which will allow voters to decide in November whether to amend the Kansas Constitution to permit parimutuel wagering on horse and dog racing and create a state-run lottery.

Senate votes were the final action required to put the two issues on the fall ballot. The resolutions do not require the governor's approval.

They join amendments approved in the 1985 session to submit to voters this November amendments to allow for the sale of liquor by the drink in restaurants and to create a property classification system.

The pari-mutuel wagering proposal passed the Senate 29-11 while the lottery resolution was adopted 27-13. Each needed 27 votes in the 40-member Senate for the required two-thirds approval.

Earlier Wednesday, the House gave its stamp of approval to the lottery amendment without a vote to spare, 84-41. The lower chamber adopted the pari-mutuel amendment, 90-35, in February. Proposals to amend the constitution must win two-thirds approval from the Legislature before they can be placed on the ballot.

The Senate adopted the lottery resolution late in the 1985 session, but had to approve it again because of House amendments. Actually, the House and Senate approved a conference committee report Wednesday, putting the lottery issue on the Manhattan Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said "I haven't followed the issue too closely, but I am concerned that a lottery may have an effect on social services. I'm afraid the money it does raise won't be used as it should be."

Wendy Schiappa, director of public affairs for the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the chamber has had an official position on the public's right to vote on the

She said the lottery is the "only means to fund unparalleled programs in economic development" and para-mutuel betting "would be a real boom for the tourism industry."

"(The Chamber) is very excited about it because we've worked very hard (on the issues)."

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kansas, said "I'm sure it's going to stir up a lot of interest." He said the issues on the ballot may prompt a lot of voters to the polls in November who might not otherwise participate in the election. "The people will have an opportunity to speak on the issues," Slat-

Legislators opposing the lottery contended the state's actually promoting gambling by operating its own lottery was immoral, and an abdication of the responsibility to raise taxes to finance needed governmental services. They also argued that those least able to buy lottery tickets would use money needed for essentials, including food, to purchase the

Some legislators simply noted polls which showed a majority of Kansans wanted to vote on the two issues and said they should be given that opportunity.

Dole target of bomb sent by former inmate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole was the target of a letter bomb that was intercepted by postal officials about 10 days ago and found to be inoperative, the senator's office confirmed Wednesday.

"It was intercepted through routine procedures, with the help of intelligence sources," said Walt Riker, Dole's press secretary. "We were tipped to it and able to cut it off before it got to Capitol Hill."

The package was found by District of Columbia postal officials working with the FBI and the office of the Senate sergeant at arms, Riker said.

Dole disclosed the incident Tuesday in remarks to a Chamber of Commerce meeting in Davenport, Iowa, during which he joked, "I guess that's one thing about slow mail - the battery had died."

Dole, R-Kan., said the package had been sent by a former Kansas prison inmate, adding that he had no indication of a motive. "I can't figure out any connection," he said.

Packages addressed to congressional offices have been routinely X-rayed by the Capitol post office since an explosion occurred outside the Senate chamber in 1983.

"With the volume of mail the Hill gets, you've got to have a means of checking packages, and that's routinely done," said Riker, who said the bomb was regarded as an isolated incident.

Students design prize-winning paper airplanes

By PAT HUND Collegian Reporter

Students had to fight off "vicious wind currents" in Durland Hall Wednesday night during the first Willie's Paper Airplane Contest.

Thirteen engineering students constructed paper airplanes for the chance to win $150 first-place and $100 second-place scholarships awarded by the College of Engineering in three categories. The contest took place in conjunction with University Open House.

The three categories were time of loft, aesthetic design and accuracy of flight, said Todd Schemm, senior in industrial engineering and coordinator of the airplane competition.

Only freshmen and sophomores in engineering were eligible for the airplane competition which was sponsored by Steel Ring, an engineering honorary society.

"The competition is good for the students because they are still in preliminary engineering classes like calculus," Schemm said. "This them involved engineering."

The time of loft category was judged by the length of time contestants were able to keep their planes in the air without crashing. The students threw their airplanes from the third floor to the atrium of Durland Hall.

Winning the time of loft category was Ronald Leonard, sophomore in electrical engineering, with a time of 13.5 seconds, while Doug Reaser, sophomore in construction science, finished second with a time of 11.4 seconds. Chris Vanderbilt, sophomore in electrical and computer engineering, placed third with 10.4 seconds. Although Leonard won, he said he felt his airplane should have been in flight for 17 seconds.

"The air currents (in Durland Hall) were more vicious than I thought," he said.

The aesthetic design competition featured two separate categories conventional and non-conventional

Mark Reams, sophomore in electrical engineering, and Jeff Ronning, sophomore in mechanical engineering, placed first and second in the overall aesthetic design competition with both being judged in the conventional airplane category

Reams said he did not plan to enter the aesthetic design competition, but he was entered in the group anyway.

"If I had planned to enter the (aesthetic design) competition, I would have designed the plane differently," he said. Reams said he had worked in modeling balsa wood gliders before, and that helped him in the competition. Reaser was the lone contestant in the non-conventional competition. Allan Goodman and Michael Mayo, instructors in architectural engineering and construction science, judged the aesthetic design competition. "We judged form and craftsmanship," Mayo said. "We also judged on how well the plane was put together." "It was a lot of fun (judging the planes)," Goodman said. The accuracy of flight category was won by Carol Tracy, freshman in nuclear engineering, who was originally volunteered by her department to compete. Even though she won the competition, Tracy said she only put in three to four hours of work in constructing the winning airplane.

"I used several different types of paper like two types of construction paper and typing paper," she said. In this category, students attempted to hit a target area on the second floor while standing from the third-floor atrium in Durland

Tracy's winning throw was a bullseye as she outdistanced the runnerup by four feet.

Brian Grimm, sophomore in agricultural engineering, and Mike Surfort, sophomore in agricultural engineering, won second and third place in the accuracy of flight competition.

Schemm said he was happy with the airplane competition and hopes the contest will continue next year.

U.S. to investigate bomb in airplane

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan ordered an investigation into the bomb blast Wednesday that killed four passengers on a TWA flight to Athens, his aides said.

'It is highly probable that the situation that occurred does involve violation of United States law and so it is appropriate that we provide investigative resources," Attorney General Edwin Meese III said in an interview on the CBS Evening News.

"The president directed U.S. authorities to cooperate in the investigation," White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters in Santa Barbara, Calif., near where Reagan is vacationing.

Speakes said the president was notified of the explosion at 6:35 a.m. PST (9:35 EST) by Donald Fortier, an official of the National Security Council.

The Justice Department, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Aviation Administration were assigned to help Italian and Greek authorities investigating the bomb, which exploded on a Boeing 727 as it flew at 15,000 feet over southern Greece.

An obscure Palestinian group called the Arab Revolutionary Cells claimed responsibility for the ex-

The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and a prominent expert on terrorism both speaking prior to the telephone call claiming responsibility - said they believed the bombing may have been related to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, but neither suggested he ordered the attack.

Terrorists may have set the bomb "to make us look impotent," said Robert Kupperman, an expert on terrorism at the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"My instincts tell me that this is related to the Gulf of Sidra matter," said Kupperman. "In my mind, I see it as purely a retalia-

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., said that the incident, "coupled with the very real possibility of Libyaninspired terrorist attacks following our recent freedom of navigation exercise in the Gulf of Sidra, underscores the need for prompt and effective action to combat the spread of international terrorism."

State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said FBI and FAA investigators are looking into the explosion, but declined to say specifically whether the State Department believes it is safe for Americans to travel in the region.

Vice President George Bush, who was briefed on the incident by NSC officials, planned to depart as scheduled Thursday on a trip to the Middle East, said spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. Bush plans to meet the leaders of Saudi Arabia, Oman and Bahrain.

In other developments: A spokesman for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Bill Carter, said officials were "monitoring the situation."

FBI agents cannot go to a foreign country and investigate unless invited by the country, but they can gather evidence in cooperation with foreign agencies for presentation to a grand jury for a possible indict-

The Justice Department entered the case based on several federal criminal laws permitting prosecution of someone who damages a U.S. aircraft overseas, said department spokesman John Russell.

The Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 empowers the department to prosecute a person who damages a U.S. airliner overseas and the offender is subject to life imprisonment if death results from the incident, said Russell

Other federal laws may also allow the department to prosecute the perpetrators for placing a bomb on an aircraft, committing a murder on a U.S. aircraft in flight over the high seas and assault on a U.S. aircraft in flight over the high seas, said Russell.

Eleven crew members die in airplane wreck

By The Associated Press MAGDALENA, N.M. - An Air

Force search-and-rescue airplane carrying 11 crewmembers crashed in a ball of flames Wednesday in a desolate area of west-central New Mexico, and authorities said all aboard were killed.

The HC-130 plane was assigned to Kirtland Air Force Base at Albuquerque, said Kay Peterson, spokeswoman at the base. Ruben Leal, public affairs specialist at Kirtland, said the airplane was on a routine training mission.

Rudy Chavez, state police dispatcher in Socorro, said the medical investigator reported that all aboard the aircraft were dead. "The wreckage is scattered over a mile radius," at the scene 10 miles north of Magdalena.

Bob Hlady, spokesman for University of New Mexico Hospital, said the hospital's helicopter ambulance was dispatched to the scene but "did not come back with anybody."

Joe Sanchez, a ranch hand, said he witnessed the accident from about 10 miles away. 'We saw a big ball of smoke, then another one, then a big ball of fire," he said. "It was a big old explosion like a forest fire. He said he met sheriff's officers on the way to the crash site and went to the scene in an isolated area known as Bear Mountain. The wreckage was "spread in little canyons and little hills ...and little trees," Sanchez said. "It looks like a lot of burned parts on the ground, broken parts. A state police helicopter, a military aircraft and a helicopter ambulance from Albuquerque were at the scene, said Sgt. John McAninch of the state police in Socorro The HC-130, a four-engine turbo-prop, is a search and rescue version of the C-130 cargo plane, Peterson

A board of officers will investigate the crash. Peterson said.

Documents show Marcos' mistakes

MANILA, Philippines - The man charged with finding the money Ferdinand E. Marcos allegedly stole from the Philippines said Thursday that documents he has recovered point to "the unprecedented plunder of an entire nation."

Jovito Salonga said a three-week trip to the United States netted titles to about $25 million worth of prime land in the Philippines acquired by the former president.

He also reported assurances from U.S. authorities that the Philippine government will be able to recover "in a few months" hundreds of millions of dollars from U.S. real estate which Marcos and his wife, Imelda, are said to have owned.

The former senator heads the Commission on Good Government. President Corazon Aquino, who took over when Marcos fled Feb. 26, has given him the responsibility of tracking down the fruits of alleged corruption by Marcos and his associates during 20 years of rule.

Tutu calls for economic sanctions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Bishop Desmond Tutu, risking arrest for treason, said Wednesday that only harsh economic sanctions can force the white government to change its course and avert

"a catastrophe in this land." The black Anglican bishop said he realized he might be prosecuted for making his first direct call for sanctions, but said he did not care because "our children are dying, our land is burning and bleeding."

"I call the international community to apply punitive sanctions against this government to help us establish a new South Africa: nonracial, democratic, participatory and just," he said.

In Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg, black activist Winnie Mandela returned to the home from which she was barred for nine years. Her attorney said the government had, in effect, lifted a banning order that had restricted her movements for more than two decades by deciding not to contest an appeal.

Government reports said most of South Africa's black students returned to class after the Easter recess, heeding a decision of black leaders not to resume a boycott that involved about 200,000 students before it was suspended last year.

City funds pay for speech coach

PHILADELPHIA - Mayor W. Wilson Goode paid $16,766 in city money to a well-known speech coach for advice, critiques of speaking engagements, speechwriting and "video consultation," according to city records.

The city had a contract from May 1985 to January 1986 with Myles Martel, an "executive communications consultant" who coached President Reagan in his 1980 debates with former President Jimmy Carter, according to Wednesday's Philadelphia Inquirer. The payments were approved by City Controller Joseph C. Vignola. "Yes, the mayor is on television a lot. Yes, he is the visible head of the city. And yes, we want him to look his best," Vignola said. Vignola said he had hired Martel as a speech consultant for himself but paid him with campaign money, not public funds.

Wheat may return to license plates

TOPEKA - It's likely a shaft of wheat will return to Kansas license plates in 1988 because the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee Wednesday refused to endorse a proposal to alter a new design for state license plates.

Rep. Eugene Shore, R-Johnson, had asked the committee to endorse a House-passed bill that would scrap a new design, set to go into effect Jan. 1, 1988, and instead restore large county designations to each plate.

Currently, the design, as approved by the Department of Revenue last summer, features a mostly white plate with a ribbon of yellow at the top. The state plans to implement the so-called "SAM-123" system, three letters followed by three numbers. A brown shaft of wheat would occupy a space between the letters and numbers.

Shore prefers the current design which stacks vertically a twoletter county designation on the left, followed by a large initial for the month the motorist renews his tags and a series of up to five

Under the new design, the two-letter county designation would be on a small sticker in the upper left corner of the plate.

Search continues for tainted milk

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. - The search was still on Wednesday for heptachlor-contaminated dairy products in Missouri as five state health department officials checked grocery stores in the Neosho area, health officials said Wednesday.

John Norris, assistant director of the Missouri Bureau of Community Sanitation, said his department checked the Ozark Terminal, a cave storage area near Neosho, and found 1,500 cases of Pet Evaporated Milk containing high levels of the pesticide.

Heptachlor was banned by the federal government in 1983 because it was found to be a cancer-causing agent in laboratory animals. However, the ban allowed the pesticide to be used as a pesticide until existing supplies ran out.

Eight dairy herds in Missouri have been quarantined due to heptachlor contamination. The source of contamination for seven of the herds has been traced back by state and federal officials to Valley Feeds, Inc., of Van Buren, Ark. Heptachlor-coated seed was sold as feed to farmers in Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Bag searches may hurt air industry

WASHINGTON - The federal government tightened baggage checks and passenger screening after the bombing of an Air India plane last summer, but airlines still lack a foolproof way of detecting smuggled explosives and officials say a search of all bags would cripple air commerce.

The bomb that exploded aboard a Trans World Airlines Boeing 727 Wednesday over Greece was hidden in a bag in the aircraft cabin, TWA officials said. The blast at 11,000 feet blew three passengers, including a child, from the aircraft to their deaths.

The plane, which landed in Athens, Greece, despite a gaping hole in its side, had taken off from the Rome airport, where aviation security experts say tight baggage screening and anti-terrorist

Checking out a book at Farrell Library may be more of a hassle the next few days because of a $23,000 "lemon" computer part.

The computer system has been down since noon Friday and it may be as long as the end of next week before it is fixed again, said Charlene Grass, acting associate dean for technical services and automation in the library.

She said she is trying to get the company, Systems Industry, that manufactures the drive, to admit the part is "a lemon."

The problem involves one of the computer's disk drives. The same disk drive has been the source of many of the computer's breakdowns in the past, Grass

The current system has been in use since 1981. The computer has been workable 90 percent of the time, she said, but it should be about 97 percent. "That is quite a big difference," Grass said.

The computer breakdown will mean the library staff will have to do everything by hand, she said. This includes circulation, book checkout and the ordering process for the acquisition of new Grass said the manual process is slow and comes at a bad time of year. Grass said there would be no need to hire extra help because the library employs a large staff.

"The staff will all pitch in on a volunteer basis," she said. "I think we can handle the circulation."

Once the system is running again, it will take a few days to input all the information processed by hand, Grass said. She hopes to have the computer system fixed by Monday, but she said she believes this is an optimistic wish.

The field engineer for the company was at the library Wednesday, and Grass said he didn't believe it could be fixed. The technical engineer is expected to visit this afternoon to verify the part could be faulty.

If the part is proven to be faulty, the company would be replacing it, and Grass said she hopes that will finally correct the instability.'

She said because of the repair cost, she wants the company to agree the disk drive is

British comedy: 'fine sense of absurd'

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

Much British comedy strikes me as an acquired taste, like brussels sprouts or fine wine. Film Review

I can understand why someone might want to acquire a taste for fine wine (it's related to social status) but I doubt if I'll ever understand why anyone might want to acquire a taste for brussels sprouts (excuse me, brussels sprouts lovers).

Sometimes British comedies affect me the same way as brussels

I like Monty Python a lot; it's the comedies of manners that bug me. I don't care about British manners or lack of manners

Malcolm Mawbray's "A Private Function" is a bit of a comedy of manners, but the movie also has a fine sense of the absurd. That I love.

The movie takes place in the middle of a major recession in England, when finding a nice cut of meat is virtually impossible for anyone except the rich. Michael Palin plays a foot-care expert. He goes from house to house clipping toenails and lovingly caressing the feet of his clients. Here in the middle of a major recession, when people can't find any food for their tables, these people are willing to pay for foot manicures.

OK, OK, that is related to the manners of the British, but it's so absurd that I like it anyway.

Palin plays a hen-pecked husband named Gilbert Chilvers. His wife, Joyce (Maggie Smith), is very conscious that her husband is a nobody, so she's always on his back. She wants some pork on the dinner table, so one day to finally quiet her, Gilbert steals a pig. He doesn't kill it, mind you. He kidnaps the pig and puts it in his den.

Watching the reactions of Palin and Smith as the pig makes messes on the floor is one of the delights of the film. They finally have pork for their dinner table, but they find the pig itself downright disgusting. Palin has to kill the pig, but he feels sorry for it. He chases it around the house with a butcher knife, but he can't kill

In the movie much of this is hilarious stuff, but at the same time the film has a very restrained tone. Instead of letting the film develop into a fable about the day this man steals a pig, director Malcolm Mawbray takes a naturalistic approach. This keeps the humor from ever breaking loose. There are several times when the humor is set up, but then the movie doesn't allow it to finish developing. One example of this comes when the farmer and the pig's beneficiaries (a group of well-to-dos are having the pig raised illegally) go to see the pig in his pen and find he has a terrible case of diarrhea. Gilbert is preparing to steal this same pig and cart him home in the back seat of his car. ("I'll put down some papers," says his wife as if they're bringing home a puppy.)

When I realized what was going to happen in the back seat of Gilbert's car, I laughed the hardest of any time in the whole movie, but the movie doesn't follow through. The pig behaves himself in the car. Gilbert isn't so fortunate once getting the pig home, though. Gilbert and Joyce react in horror to what the pig does, as any pig would, on the floor of the den. But overall he's a good decent British pig (as decent as can be expected anyway).

Even though the comedy is a bit too restrained for its own good, there's still plenty of good humor in "A Private Function." If the filmmakers had dished up more absurdity in exchange for the film's naturalistic tone, this could've been a hilarious outing. The stuff of farce is present in "A Private Function," but the filmmakers have their British collars on just a bit too

Colleges to feel pinch of budget reductions reality and impact of losing students is being felt at the University through budget cuts mandated by the Kansas Legislature.

The process has begun on campus to determine where the little money will go. William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, went as far as to call a special meeting Tuesday to discuss the upcoming budget cuts with faculty in that college.

It's not just this year that the University will experience the harsh reality of funding cuts. The University budget for 1986-87 has been cut by almost $300,000, while the 1987-88 budget has been reduced by almost $1 million.

Stamey said at the meeting the University has an "image problem," that puts stress on student recruiting efforts, but

Well, it's finally here. The declined to discuss solutions to the problem. This is the wrong view to take. Because budget cuts are directly related to the declining University's enrollment, all University administrators should welcome constructive suggestions as to how to recruit and retain students.

The time of reckoning is here. The loss of $1.3 million over the next two years will force difficult spending cuts. The budget cuts are distressing and something needs to be done to offset them.

Some colleges, such as the College of Human Ecology, have begun active recruitment and retention campaigns, and they should be commended. However, the efforts of a few are not going to offset the woes of the many.

Libraries need to celebrate growth

Theoretically students attend a university to learn by exercising that mass of tissue encased in their skulls. But many students fail miserably at this task.

They either forget the muscle is there, relax their regular exercise routine and let the muscle become flabby or don't use the right equipment to train. Solutions to this devastating problem vary. While some students take impossible course loads to shape up the brain in record time, others take the intellectual route and stimulate their creative and philosophical juices by delving into subjects too deep for Socrates or Plato. Using proper equipment such as books, periodicals and research texts is essential to success.

One of the best and most easily accessible tools at our disposal is a knowledge bank, commonly referred to as a library. This ingenious invention provides a wealth of information and entertainment to people who enjoy expanding their horizons and reaching into the unknown.

But to remain an integral part of a university, a library must continually expand its horizons to achieve a mark of excellence. The libraries at K-State are doing just that.

The University's millionth volume is finally a reality. Now K-State has entered the major league category of libraries and looks toward the 2 million mark in 2011.

SUSAN D. BAIRD Collegian Columnist

To mark the monumental occasion the library staff has planned a month-long celebration. There will be a reception this evening in Farrell Library for the unveiling of a rare books exhibit that includes the five special volumes, commemorative books for the nine colleges and more than 30 volumes from private donors.

The KSU Friends of the Libraries and the Landon Lecture Committee invited Joseph Heller, author of "Catch 22," to deliver a Landon Lecture April 16.

Why all the hullabaloo over a stupid book? It took K-State 123 years to reach this mark. That's nothing to brag about. Right?

Wrong. One million volumes mean more to this University than the 26 miles of library shelves it will take to hold them. That number marks a milestone in achievement for K-State as an educational and research

1500 HEAVILY-ARMED

INVADING HONDURAS.

NICARAGUAN TROOPS ARE

From the beginning, skeptics scoffed at the idea of a celebration commemorating the millionth volume. They didn't understand why the celebration could be so important since it took so long to reach the goal.

Thursday, April 3, 1986 - 4

Even though our library didn't achieve this mark as quickly as the University of Kansas' library, that's no reason to hang our heads in shame. Having one million volumes in the collection is an important achievement for any library. The time it took to reach this goal is irrelevant.

Critics have also questioned the selection of special volumes for the occasion rather than a larger selection of books and periodicals that could be checked out by

Since this is a special occasion, the final books should be important contributions to all facets of the University community. Konrad Gesner's four-part zoological encyclopedia recognizes K-State's founding as a land-grant college, while Georg Bockler's work about mechanical engineering and John Milton's poem "Paradise Lost" represent K-State's emphasis on engineering and the Making this a gala celebration is appropriate because it marks the University's dedication to research and scholarship. I can't wait until the next one.

U.S. economy falters as price of oil drops about the low gasoline prices, but larger automobiles. hitting oil-producing states rebounds throughout the nation, those smiles may fade to tears.

We've all been laughing at the leaders of Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, after years of endless profit taking, as they sweat out the worldwide collapse in oil prices. But OPEC is not the only area sweating — our own neighbor to the south, Oklahoma, is taking the price collapse like a kick in the teeth. Once-booming Texas seems on the verge of a bust.

The root of the problem stems from overproduction. After experiencing the energy crisis of the early 1970s, the United States effectively reduced consumption. The lower consumption combined with overproduction creates the chaos we have today. However, America's live-forthe-moment attitude prevailed when gasoline prices dropped below $1 per gallon and the price of a barrel of oil fell below $10. Already car manufacturers are

Nor will we enjoy the low prices if the economy of one of the nation's strongest states plummets. Texas now loses $3 billion in gross economic output for every $1 drop in oil prices, according to one recent survey. Kansas will also lose millions in oil tax revenue this year.

The crisis has severely crippled the Mexican economy, and unprecedented numbers of illegal immigrants are crossing the Texas border. Unemployment in Texas is already 8.4 percent.

The lesson is clear for all to see. Once-confident Texas is being forced to diversify its economic base. The drop in oil prices will also teach Texans not be become too overconfident during periods of economic prosperity.

GSI demand rising

It's an unusual problem. K-State's Department of Grain Science and Industry has more summer jobs and internships for bakery science students than it has students wanting jobs.

At this point we have at least twice as many jobs as we have students wanting jobs. Salaries for jobs are quite good, too.

Students have opportunities for jobs in all phases of the baking industry. Last summer students worked as bakery production trainees, production line spervisors, sales trainees, in research and development and quality control positions.

One thing we feel is outstanding about the bakery science program is that our students can have a job or internship after their freshman year, so they can spend as many as three summers working in the industry before they graduate.

Summer jobs aren't the only plus for a student in bakery science. Support of the baking and allied industries makes it possible for one of every four students in this curriculum to receive an academic scholarship.

Since the program is the only one of its kind, the demand for graduates is very strong. Although it's only March, May graduates are making their job selections, and salaries are good. Salaries as high as $28,000 for a student with a bachelor's degree, with nearly all students going for more than $22,000.

How much longer are students going to complain and laugh about K-State athletics? Athletic Director Larry Travis has put before the students a proposal that would allow us to help our athletic program. This proposal would cost the students between $30 and $40 per year and enable students to

The proposal would raise almost $450,000 that would be divided among non-revenue sports. I don't know how many of you realize it, but students currently pay $110 per year to use the Lafene Health Center and $151 per year for "special fees."

Athletics is a major aspect of publicity for any university. Let's show our support for our athletic programs by supporting this proposal.

Abide by the rules

Re: Tracy Schemper's letter, "Ignoring pet issue," in the March 20 Collegian:

As residents of Jardine Terrace and as concerned individuals, it is time some issues are addressed concerning the Jardine mayors, the pet policy and Schemper's recent letters.

Jardine mayors are dedicated to setting fair policies. Their job includes weighing the pros and cons of an issue and basing their decisions on the overall issue.

Schemper stated 79 percent of residents surveyed would not mind if their neighbor owned a cat. She feels the mayors did not represent Jardine residents in their vote. A mayor's job is not to automatically pass proposals which a majority of residents want. For example, if 100 percent of Jardine residents wanted their rent lowered that doesn't mean rent would change. Just because a majority wants an issue passed does not mean it is the best policy.

It is in this light that mayors voted, not on the emotional wants of residents, but on the issues of the pros and cons of cats in Jardine.

Regarding Schemper's statement that if mayors do not want to establish good policies then they should allow others "who care and are ready and willing" to have a chance. If she and other residents are so concerned about Jardine why is it that they have left meetings as soon as their single concern is addressed and have not attended recent meetings?

I am sorry Schemper and others feel they have not been represented fairly, but it is time they grow up and accept the mayors' vote. We in Jardine have concerned and dedicated mayors who do vote in the best interest of the residents. If Schemper and others cannot live by the rules they can always find another place to live with their animals. By the way, no other Big Eight schools allow cats or dogs in their housing

Old Stadium unsafe

Editor.

The west side of the Old Stadium is unsafe. The Department of Art at K-State has always been at the bottom of the list when considered for adequate facilities.

Something needs to be done to prevent, or at least provide adequate warning of, a fire. As I was examining the building I found that there was only one smoke detector in the building and that the doors, which would prevent a fire from spreading down the second floor hall, are missing.

A fire, if it was to occur, would spread quickly through the art studios in West Stadium since the interior structure is made of wood. Installing at least two smoke detectors in each section of the stadium, one on the second floor hall and one in the first floor hall, would give students adequate warning and time to get out.

Two fire doors should also be added to the two existing door jams. This will stop the air flow through the second floor and greatly reduce the spread of fire and smoke throughout the building. Because of the use of kilns in ceramics studio and flammable materials in the painting studios, a fire could occur. If it does occur I want to be able to get

Research funding key to operating in black

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., made a mad dash through campus Wednesday to meet with administrators, faculty and students to discuss a variety of educational issues.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, Slattery said specialists and researchers must turn their attention to questions of farming profitability - not production - if the farm economy is to improve.

Slattery, whose district includes Manhattan, accurately noted that agriculture suffers from chronic overproduction. While production advances are captured by some farmers in the form of profits, agriculture policy to date has not adequately addressed problems of overproduction.

K-State is working to increasing profits for Kansas farmers, but improving research and extension programs is difficult when federal funding is reduced. In fiscal year 1986, K-State lost During a discussion with more than $400,000 in federal funding because of budget cuts mandated by Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction legislation. President Reagan has proposed greater reductions in support for agricultural programs for fiscal year 1987.

The Kansas economy depends on strong agriculture programs. The federal government should make an adequate investment in agriculture. Funding research at K-State may be the best investment Congress can make.

Cuts to higher education proposed in President Reagan's budget for the upcoming year will probably not be as severe as they look, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., told a group of University deans Wednesday morn-

"The president's budget wasn't very kind to the upper education institutions," Slattery said. "Those cuts will probably be rejected by both the House and Senate. I don't anticipate any cuts in guaranteed student loans and there is some talk of an increase in Pell grants."

Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, said K-State's deans have been redoubling their efforts to support scholarships in order to not just rely on the federal government.

"I think all of us have raised more money in telefunds than ever before. We're holding up our end because we're realizing it's not just' Washington's problem, it's our problems," Lapping said. Slattery said the Gramm-Rudman bill, which he supports, has been the victim of misinformation and should result in "very modest cuts across the board." The bill should make Republicans and Democrats in the House and Senate work together, he said.

The biggest unknown, Slattery said, is the farm programs which may cost twice as much as originally

Once the government has decided on where it will spend, it needs to continue with that decision and not cut back on it, he said.

"You've got to decide and go ahead with what you're doing with what you've got left after entitlements, defense and interest payments," he

The question of where revenues will come from is still a matter of debate and will determine future tax reforms, Slattery said.

"I think the president will ultimately compromise as he's always done," he said. "I think the Senate is clearly on record as supporting some kind of budget in-

Common sense shows serious problems in President Ronald Reagan's proposed Strategic Defense Initiative, said U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan.

"If you were the Soviet Union, and you saw the U.S. building a 'big umbrella' capable of knocking down 90 percent of your missiles, what would you do?" Slattery asked. He said the Soviet Union's obvious response would be to build more missiles.

"We're relying more on high technology," Slattery said. "I would rather have greater numbers and more reliability than high technology."

Slattery answered questions about Star Wars and U.S. involvement in Central America before more than 100 students in a U.S. Politics class Wednesday.

He said the U.S. policy of providing aid to the contras is unjustified because it is not supported by the Latin American democracies.

The Catholic church, the most influential institution in Latin America, opposes U.S. aid to the contras, and reports of U.S. military advisers have shown the contras will not be able to defeat Sandinista Nicaragua's government, Slattery said.

"Where is this policy leading us? We arm the contras. We train the contras. If they get surrounded by Sandinistas, what are we going to do?" Slattery said.

Slattery supports monetary aid to the governments of El Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala in an effort to "work through our Latin democracies" to put pressure on the Sandinistas.

Slattery said he didn't know how much the truth is distorted in media and government reports of what is happening in Central America.

Arpin's road to recovery complete

By RON RENO Collegian Reporter

That Gary Arpin is back and competing in the javelin throw after being out for nearly two years due to a knee injury is a feat in itself. The fact that he is expected to be a contender for the Big Eight Conference crown this season is something beyond that.

Arpin recently placed third in the Paper Tiger Invitational at Baton Rouge, La., where more than 30 schools were represented. It was his first competition since the injury.

Arpin tore the ligaments in his left knee in March 1984 while playing intramural basketball. He had placed fifth in the Big Eight as a freshman and was looking forward to improving in his sophomore year.

While the rest of the team was competing, however, Arpin was in a cast for eight weeks. After it was removed, Arpin did a lot of bicycling to strengthen his leg over the

He decided not to compete his junior year, though he was given the team physician's

"I felt like I wanted at least a year to lay off and evaluate my knee and see what it was going to be like," Arpin said.

Arpin said he decided to come back this year because, as a senior, it would be his last chance to compete at the collegiate level. Another reason was Arpin's intense desire to compete.

"I'm a very competitive person," Arpin said.

Coach Steve Miller said he is "very happy" to have Arpin back on the team. He said the fact that Arpin is back from what he termed a "severe, severe injury" is a testimony to his competitiveness and determination.

'Gary is certainly a great story," Miller said. "He's got great character." Miller said he thinks Arpin could very well win the Big Eight championship this year. "He has done a great job," Miller added.

"I'm really proud of him." Arpin said the effects of the injury are still evident in many things he does, even such simple tasks as walking up stairways. Arpin competes with a brace on his knee to help protect it from a recurrence of the injury.

"Right now the knee is not what it should be," Arpin said. "There is still a strong possibility of injury.

He also said that if the injury were to happen again, there is a good chance his knee would be permanently disabled. Arpin said this is always in the back of his mind when he is competing.

"When I put that brace on, it is always reminding me," Arpin said. "It always makes me aware of it.

He said many people could not understand at first why he would want to come back and take that chance. Since his decision, however, he said people, including his coaches, have been extremely supportive of his comeback. "They have been real supportive," he said. "They don't make me do anything I'm not feeling comfortable with." Arpin said his main goal for this year is to

'Cat baseball team better than 15-15 record shows

Despite the fact that the K-State baseball team is stumbling, the Wildcats are not in the process of falling on their collective faces.

The team is on a five-game losing skid. That fact is deceiving — four of the five were at the hands of a exciting and No. 22 ranked Nebraska Cornhusker baseball team, and the other loss came at the hands of No. 8 Oral Roberts Tuesday night. It should be said all five losses were on the road.

So don't be deceived by the losing tendencies of the Wildcats. The team's record stands at 15-15, but nine of those losses were laid upon the 'Cats by nationally ranked teams.

The K-State football and basketball teams can't use similar reasons for their shortcomings.

Unlike Wildcat teams of the past, Coach Gary Vaught's 'Cats are not afraid to face the big boys. Vaught knows darn well that if the Wildcats are ever to become a baseball big boy themselves, they better know how to act like a big boy.

Tonight those same Nebraska Cornhuskers who beat the Wildcats four times in a row in Lincoln, Neb., come to Manhattan for a 7 p.m. game that will not count in the conference standings.

Another game between the Cornhuskers and Wildcats promises to be a battle. Vaught will make sure his squad is pumped up to exact some revenge from the "Big Red."

It is time to see some more fans at Frank Myers Field. College baseball is an exciting experience too many are missing out on.

And, for those who claim they have no idea where the baseball field is, tonight is their perfect chance. Drive toward the football field - when you see the bright lights in the sky, change your course and drive to the lights instead.

Even if you have your doubts the K-State baseball team is worth seeing (you're wrong), go see the Cornhusker

Nebraska plays an exciting brand of "hit-and-run" baseball. The 'Huskers' lineup is highlighted by all-American center fielder Paul Meyers and all-Big Eight Conference second baseman Larry Meyers' spectacular play in the field and red-hot bat give you a chance to see a prospective major league player.

Mims is no slouch either. The speedy infielder got on base 75 percent of the time when the 'Cats played the 'Huskers in Lincoln, and his speed turns singles and walks into doubles. Against K-State he was a coach's dream lead-off hitter.

But K-State is a good team in its own right. Catcher Jeff Turtle - despite being in a mild slump - is hitting eighth best in the conference with a .356 average.

FITZGERALD Assistant

Pitcher Rocky Ferguson ranks fourth in the conference in strikeouts and reliever Marty Darnell has the lowest earned run average in the Big Eight at 1.08.

Others who rank with the leaders in the conference include center fielder Gary Pridey who is in a four-way tie for the lead in triples, reserve outfielder Tom Parsons who ranks third in steals, first baseman Otto Kaifes who ranks seventh in RBI's and Turtle who is tied for fifth in doubles.

People keep asking me what is going wrong with the 'Cats. I keep replying

And indeed nothing is going wrong with the Wildcats. The team is doing very well against the teams it has faced. K-State should have won two and maybe three games against Nebraska, but the Huskers had one thing over the Wildcats Nebraska knows how to win.

That may sound silly, but winning programs can not remain great unless there is an overriding feeling that no matter what the score in the ball game is, the team will find some way to win.

The K-State program hasn't developed that feeling quite yet. The 'Cats too often seem shocked they are doing so well against their highly regarded opponents that they lose their concentration and let a great victory slip away with an untimely error, or a mental error on the bases or at the plate.

The ballpark is an exciting place to spend a night or afternoon. The athletic department has set up a flat bed truck so you can take your grill and cook up some chow while you wash it down with your favorite beverage you are free to bring in your cooler. Hint, hint.

Nebraska certainly won't be your last chance to see the Wildcats this season either. Oklahoma, Wichita State, Missouri and Iowa State, to name a few, are still scheduled to come to Manhattan

Support the Wildcat baseball team. After all, the other two spectator sports football and basketball - failed loyal K-Staters. At least when the baseball team loses, it loses to good teams and they go down fighting.

K-State baseball '86 is worth your time. But, more importantly, your time is worth a lot to the K-State baseball team. Winning comes so much easier when there are plenty of fans to win for.

NCAA picks 3-point shot, instant replay for next year

From Staff and Wire Reports

DALLAS - The NCAA men's basketball rules committee Wednesday joined the NBA in adopting a three-point field goal and agreed to use instant replays to check scoring and timing errors, rules committee director Dr. Edward S. Steitz said.

All NCAA institutions will begin using a 19-foot, 9-inch range for their three-point plays beginning with the 1986-87 season, the 12-member committee decided.

Former K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman believes the addition of the three-point field goal will be a good for the game.

"I think it (the three-point field goal) will go well with the 45-second clock," Hartman said. "I don't think it will be that big of a change."

Steitz said the decision came after a five-year research period in conferences 20 experimented with the three-point shot. He said research showed coaches approved the three-point goal by a two-to-one margin.

The committee also approved the use of television replays for timers' and scorers' mistakes and malfunctions of the clocks. Steitz emphasized that replays would not be used for any other officiating

"We believe that the adoption of the three-point field goal will do much to open up the rough inside play in our game," Steitz said. "Teams will have to play more away from the basket. People will say 'You are putting the little man back in the game' and that is good.'

K-State athletic director Larry Travis had not heard about the rule change when he was contacted.

"I like the three-point field goal," Travis said. "I think it's exciting and will award the longrange shooters in college basketball.

"It should make the games more exciting at the end. I liked it when they were experimenting with it (in the individual conferences)," Travis said.

The addition of instant replays to check scoring and timing errors inches.

was praised by Hartman.

"It's great," Hartman said. "In the instance of the Midwest Regional (referring to the Kansas-Michigan State game) it could have helped to rectify a mistake. I think it will help the official a great deal."

Travis responded to the instant replay rule with a bit of caution.

"I don't know what all the rule entails, but I think the rule may cause some problems," Travis said. "I'm not sure that it will be good, because it will take the human element out of the game and may add something more to question. I think we've done well without it."

The committee also said technical fouls would not be charged against a coach for pointing out scoring and timing errors to the scorers' table.

Steitz said several conferences experimented with different distances for the three-point play, but a questionnaire of participating coaches showed the most favored range was 19 feet, 9

Green not happy with Cey, Frey; Cedeno feels at home in Toronto

By The Associated Press

MESA, Ariz. - Dallas Green is not happy with some of his veteran Chicago Cub players and he is letting them know, saying, "I've got a right to bang 'em when I don't get my dollar's worth."

The outspoken Cubs' general manager and president took special aim at third-baseman Ron Cey. But he also demanded better play from catcher Jody Davis, left-fielder Gary Matthews and center-fielder Bob Dernier.

And, Green said, the middle relief has to be better and the starting pitchers have to hold up.

Green did not ignore Manager Jim Frey, either.

"In 1984, Jimmy was a great manager," Green said. "In 1985, he was a lousy manager. We won in '84, we lost in '85. That's what managing is all about, I guess.'

After finishing first in the National League East in 1984, the Cubs dropped to fourth last year.

Though Green criticized Cey, he emphatically ended speculation that the Cubs might release the third baseman and shift Keith Moreland from right field to replace him.

Cey has two guaranteed years left on his five-year contract and it would cost the Cubs some $2 million if he were released.

"I happen to think that somewhere down the line, Cey is going to reach down and get something out of himself that maybe none of us feel he is capable of doing.

"But everytime you talk to Ronnie, it's 'Don't blame everything on me.' I understand all that talk. Nobody is blaming everything on him. But he darn sure didn't help last year," Green said. Cey slipped to 22 home runs with only 63 runs batted in and had a .232 average last season. He has had a poor spring at bat and in the field. Green claims he has tried to stay out of the clubhouse and not interfere with Frey

"One of the problems that Jimmy (Frey) and I have is that I criticize the players publicly," said Green. "I pay 'em so I've got a right to bang em when I don't get my dollar's worth. I'm always going to express my opinion. That's me.'

DUNEDIN, Fla. - Veteran outfielder Cesar Cedeno, traded by the Cincinnati Reds last year to the St. Louis Cardinals, says he's found a new home with the Toronto Blue Jays and believes his career is far from over.

"I have a lot of friends here," Cedeno said, following Monday's game here with the Reds. "A lot of friends from the Dominican Republic, people I have known for a long time. I played in the minor leagues with Cliff Johnson."

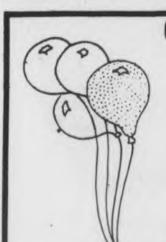

Cedeno has been with the Blue Jays since signing as a free agent on March 13.

KU's Marshall out for season

Extension programs offer farm crises solution, Slattery says

By MELISSA BRUNE ERIC RHODENBAUGH Staff Writers

Divisions among farmers and improvements in profitability through extension programs are issues influencing solutions to the nation's farm crisis, a Kansas representative said Wednesday.

Geographic and philosophical differences among farmers prevent legislators from being able to solve many problems for them, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., told an Agricultural Politics and Policy Slattery said people in farming regions, such as the 2nd District he represents, have the "impression that the urban-dominated Congress is a problem in terms of developing farm policy. I don't believe that's correct.

"The inability to respond (to farming problems) is more a function of divisions within farming than apathy in the Legislature," Slattery said.

Differences in "farm country" include size of farms, financial situations and commodities produced, he

"The dairy farmer has a different view from the meat or wheat producer," Slattery said.

Another conflict for farmers is the difference in policy views between the Reagan administration and Congress, he said. Slattery said the president was able to win majorities in farm country, yet his philosophy is much different than the philosophy of those elected to Congress from the same regions.

Slattery said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, voted for Reagan. "There is a 180-degree difference" in their farm views, "yet these two will have to come together to make this government responsive to farm pro-

Slattery said he believes the way to help farmers is to get the deficit under control, lower interest rates and deal with the soaring dollar. He said farmers have a debt of more than $200 billion, which results in interest payments exceeding net farm income, he said.

The debate among legislators has historically been and continues to be the question of what agricultral policy should be, he said.

"Is the government's role to reduce supply or to maintain income for farmers?" he asked, saying the question is unresolved.

Slattery said the farm bill passed by Congress last December did not adequately address the supply or maintenance problem "while costing the taxpayers a record amount of

He also said the federal government has been pursuing monetary and fiscal policies which are not developmental to rural America. Slattery said the "triple whammy" for the farmer is high interest rates, an inflated dollar which is devastating for agricultural exports and the lower land values resulting from both.

He said the federal government must "come together in compromise" in order to save the small Agriculture, Slattery addressed the function of agriculture extension programs, saying such programs need to focus on improving the profitability of agriculture.

"In the past, it seems like we have focused much of our efforts on improving productive capacity and improving yields," Slattery said. "But we don't have a capacity problem we don't have a production problem - in my judgment we have a profitability problem."

Woods said it was part of the college's research effort to produce existing products "with less inputs" and an increase in production effi-

Slattery said the goals of increasing productivity and meeting the "bottom line" of helping the individual farmer survive were not mutually exclusive."

"I'm not saying you totally ignore the question of improving yields," Slattery said. "Historically our focus has been on meeting the world food supply, meeting the world food demand, which is great. But I think that right now it's important for us to really be emphasizing this bottom

Slattery said President Reagan's proposals concerning extension and Soil Conservation Service cuts "are going nowhere."

He said urban lawmakers have supported agriculture programs consistently, but when "Gramm-Rudman really hits, people are going to be looking at their own areas."

program," Slattery said.

Slattery said the three major factors of production in agriculture labor costs, energy costs and capital costs - have been doing "interesting costs have risen 300 percent and capital costs have also risen, he said. 'Agriculture is flying in the face of these two major trends," he said. Agriculture research needs to determine how agriculture can be and energy intensive, he said.

Woods said research into alternative crops that could be grown in Kansas needs to look at agricultural products being produced in other areas which could be brought to the

"The way you're listened to is to get involved in the political process. The process responds to those people who participate in the process," Slattery said. "If you don't participate in the process, if you don't vote, people don't listen to you. Politicians don't listen to you."

Slattery used an example from his past to illustrate what motivates a politician to listen to students.

"Bobby Kennedy came to (K-State) in 1968. I was up in the students packed to the rafters in Ahearn Field House," Slattery said. "Why was he in Ahearn Field House? Because he was running for president of the United States and the kids in this school were going to vote. And he was here to motivate them and he motivated them."

Slattery said he hoped college students of today would return to the level of political awareness students had in the 1960s.

"The young people (in the '60s) had a much greater share of the action," he said.

Regents recommend tuition increases for state universities

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA - A state Board of Regents committee Thursday recommended that tuition at state universities be increased an overall 6 percent starting in the fall semester of 1987.

The Regents' Special Committee on Tuition and Fees approved a plan that calls for increases ranging from 2.3 percent to 25 percent in tuition for students at the regents' institutions - six state universities, their branches and the Kansas Technical Institute in Salina.

University President Duane Acker said the increase was seen at K-State as part of an effort to keep student expenses at about 25 percent of operational costs for instruction and related programs.

"Tuition increases are never an item that we applaud because of pressures on students and families," Acker said.

The committee will present the plan to the full board during its April meeting. The board is expected to act on the plan during its May meeting, said Tom Rawson, regents director of planning and budget. The regents have a policy of studying tuition increases about 18 months before they have them take effect.

The increase in tuition would help cover an anticipated increase of 5 percent in regents institutions' educational costs for the fiscal year that begins July 1, 1987. Rawson said the regents normally have provided for such an increase for the past few

Under the plan, resident students' tuition generally would increase less than the tuition for non-resident students. Despite the increases, the regents institutions should remain competitive with other universities in the region and with selected peer institutions around the country, said Stanley Koplik, regents executive director.

Non-resident student tuition would increase between 4.8 percent and 12.1 percent, depending upon the institution. At each school, non-resident tuition would cost about three times as much as resident tuition, about the same as the ratio at selected peer in-

"The recommendation of the com-tion increase on Kansas residents,"

The plan also includes a 25 percent increase in the tuition for students at the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine. Rawson said the increase is part of a plan to double the college's tuition by fall 1990, to pay for improvements in instruction. "This is part of a total effort to fill existing professor slots," said James most students say they will find themselves borrowing more money. Under the plan, tuition would increase from: - $520 to $535 a semester for resident undergraduate students at the University of Kansas, K-State and Wichita State University. The increase is 2.9 percent. $580 to $595 for resident graduate students at KU, K-State and Wichita State, an increase of 2.6

Retention report shows University loses 2,760

By DAN ALLEN Collegian Reporter

The University lost 2,760 students from fall 1985 to fall of 1986 and 60 percent were doing "C" or better work, said Michael Lynch, director of the academic assistance center and chairman of the committee looking into retention, recruitment and

"It is becoming apparent that we are not losing students because of academic difficulties," he said during a meeting of the committee Thursday in the Union.

Lynch said students leave the University for "hundreds of different reasons." While some students transfer and others simply do not have a good goal in mind, Lynch said, the single biggest reason students leave the University is financial problems.

Judy Lynch, assistant director of the academic assistance center and chairwoman of the subcommittee for assisting students on academic probation, said one-third of all University freshmen have grade-point averages below 2.0.

She said although they may have poor GPAs, very few are dismissed from the University because of academic reasons.

Judy Lynch said mandatory advising, formal orientation and a mandatory academic success workshop are three of the programs that can be installed to aid in retention.

Marilyn Trotter, director of new student programs and chair of the orientation/enrollment subcommittee, said it is important the University provide some orientation with enrollment.

Trotter said orientation programs definitely have a positive effect on retention, however she said the program must be well designed.

"If you give students too much information, you run the risk of information overload," she said.

Trotter said early enrollment and August enrollment should be maintained as they are. She said all new students should be encouraged to enroll in a 16-week orientation

If possible, she said, each section should be taught at least partially by the student's adviser; when this is not possible, assignments should include "forced contact" with advisers at crucial times.

The orientation course would also include information about the University, including things like drop/add and retake policies, Trot-

Michael Lynch said this is the first time such a committee has been set up to research retention. He said some of the programs can be instituted for the 1986-87 school year and some will have to wait until a year from now.

The committee also heard a report from Lawrence Moeder, assistant director of student financial assistance. Moeder's report concerned retention through student employment. The consensus opinion of the subcommittee is that while student employment is important to retention, it is "not the only, or possibly not the most important tool for an increased retention rate."

Next week, three more subcommittees will give their reports which will include reports about career planning, housing and student life.

The committee looking into retention consists of approximately 40 administrators and 10 to 12 students,

Parade to kick off weekend events

Open House activities to begin today

By KIM KINSLOW Collegian Reporter

The fun of All-University Open House activities begins early today with classes cancelled after 1:30

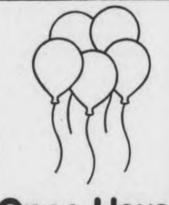

The mid-campus parade, organized by the College of Engineering will begin from Willard and King Halls to kick off the activities. Other Open House activities begin at 9 a.m. Saturday and last until 4 p.m. All colleges are participating with events scheduled throughout the Block and Bridle and the Dairy Science clubs will sponsor the Little American Royal at 1 p.m. at Weber

Like the American Royal, which takes place every year in Kansas City, Mo., the LAR features showmanship of livestock. Additionally, a rubber-band tractor pull will begin at 1 p.m. at Waters Hall with the public admitted free.

An ice sculpture contest between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. in Seaton Courtyard is part of the promotional activities of the College of Architecture and Design.

Open House

Planetarium shows will take place at 10:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. at Cardwell Hall in conjunction with the College of Arts and Sciences.

Don Smith, assistant to the dean of the college, said visitors coming to the ground floor of the Union, where the college is holding most of its activities, will receive a passport which will make them eligible for a prize drawing if they visit three different departments in the college in three different buildings.

The College of Business Administration is holding a drawing at Calvin Hall for one $500 and two $100 scholarships. The criteria for receiving one of the awards are being a junior or senior in high school and enrolling in the College of Business Administration upon graduating.

Reading arts projects will be on display the College of Education throughout the day in Bluemont Hall. Michael Holen, associate dean of the college, said prospective students will be interested in the display because it will be something they will be doing in the classrooms. A Mousetrap missile contest and Willie the Wildcat Airplane Contest for high school participants are planned for the College of Engineering's activities, said Ray Hightower, assistant to the dean of the college. An awards banquet at 6:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom will also highlight the college's activities, Hightower said. The College of Human Ecology will celebrate for Kansas' 125th birthday with a cake decorated with sunflowers and wheat, with the cakecutting ceremony at noon. Manhattan Mayor Susan Lindamood will cut the cake, said Karen Pence, assistant to the dean of the college. An Auxiliary Petting Zoo at the Veterinary Clinical Sciences Building is part of the activities the College of Veterinary Medicine, said Carolyn Roberts, instructor at the Veterinary Medical Center.

Other special events include: The Concert Jazz Ensemble performing 11:05 to 11:45 a.m. Saturday in Seaton Courtyard.

Tours of the Child Care

Cooperative after 3 p.m. today and between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday for parents, with play activities for their children. The Open House annual selection of St. Patrick and St. Patricia. Six engineering students have been chosen as finalists for the contest, The royal couple will reign over Open House today and Saturday.

A dance sponsored by the Student Foundation. The dance, which kicks off Open House festivities, is from 8 to 11:30 tonight in the Union

No admission will be charged and free refreshments will be provided. A disc jockey from Ultimate Entertainment will provide the music.

Rare volumes mark milestone for library

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

One million strong...and going

Farrell Library reached a milestone in its history as the millionth volume took its place on the library's shelves during a ceremony Thursday.

John Milton's 1669 edition of "Paradise Lost" represents the millionth volume.

Alexandra Mason, Spencer Librarian at the University of Kansas, spoke at a special ceremony to celebrate the event. Other volumes included in the millionth volume collection are

Conrad Gesner's 1551 edition of "Historiae Animalium Lib. I De Quadrupedibus Viviparis" and Georg Andreas Bockler's 1662 "Theatrum of editon Machinarum Novum Exhibens Opera Molaria et Aquatica."

The three commemorative volumes cost a total of about $18,000.

"The library is actually the heart and soul of the University," President Duane Acker said, in his opening remarks. "The event is a symbolic occasion which not only marks the end of an achievement but also the beginning of another," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries. Hobrock estimates that with the current acquisition rate, Farrell should reach the second millionth volume mark in 25 years, as opposed to the 123 years it took to reach the first million. "There's something magic about the millionth volume," Mason said. "It's important to make sure it's just not any old book." Mason said she believes it is not size of the library but the titles of the books which make a symbolic library.

The collection will be on display until May 17 in Farrell 315. Anyone wishing to view the books may do so.

Province leaders debate integration

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - White and black leaders in Natal province on Thursday began debating a proposal to create the nation's first racially integrated regional government.

Meanwhile, police headquarters said four blacks died in racial attacks around the country, including two black youths killed in street battles with police patrols in the black township of Vosloorus, southeast of Johannesburg.

A court had imposed harsh restrictions on a funeral in Vosloorus for a suspected black nationalist guerrilla shot by police last week. Roving security vehicles fired repeated barrages of tear gas and birdshot to break up groups of blacks who gathered for the service in defiance of the restrictions, and militant youths enforced a one-day protest strike by workers in the township, witnesses said.

An evening police summary of a dozen unrest incidents around the country during the day said the charred body of a black woman was found at Kwanobuhle, near Uitenhage in the eastern Cape Province.

In the black township of Soweto outside Johannesburg, a crowd stabbed a black man, placed a tire around his neck, ignited it and danced around him as he burned to death, the South African Press

The man was slain for allegedly pushing a man out of a moving train over the weekend, the report said.

Police hunt for bombing suspect

ATHENS, Greece - Police are hunting for an Arab woman suspected of planting the bomb that exploded on a TWA jetliner over southern Greece, killing four Americans, police sources said Thurs-

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a woman called May Elias Mansur, a known terrorist, flew on the TWA Boeing 727 from Cairo to Athens Wednesday morning. The plane went on to Rome and the bomb exploded during its return flight from Rome to Athens Wednesday afternoon.

"We have a launched a search around Athens and other cities and also put out a signal to trace this person through Interpol," one police source said. Earlier Thursday in Rome, Italian Interior Minister Oscar Luigi Scalfaro said, "It is certain that a suspect person, who is on file as a terrorist, got on in Cairo and got off in Athens, occupying in the airplane the exact seat where the explosion

The Italian news agency ANSA on Thursday night quoted unidentified Italian investigators in contact with Greek authorities as confirming that the suspect was believed to have boarded with a Lebanese passport in the name of May Mansur.

The blast tore a 9-by-3-foot hole in the right cabin wall in front of the wing while the plane was about 15,000 miles over the ground. A Colombian-American man and three Greek-Americans - a woman, her daughter and 9-month-old granddaughter - were sucked out. The plane landed safely in Athens about 25 minutes later.

Hondurans give Contras weapons

WASHINGTON - Last month's incursion by the Nicaraguan Army into Honduras was aimed partly at retaliating against Honduran authorities for having released weapons and other supplies to anti-Sandinista rebels, U.S. officials said Thursday.

A senior intelligence official said that several weeks before the March 22 border crossing, the Hondurans released new assault rifles, rocket-propelled grenades and other supplies to the Contras that the rebels had acquired from undisclosed foreign sources.

The Hondurans "opened up the warehouses," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

The Contras need Honduran cooperation to gain access to the supplies sent to them. But Honduras, worried about provoking the Sandinistas, has often withheld the equipment for extended periods. The rebels receive non-lethal equipment from the United States and acquire weaponry from other sources, the identity of which neither U.S. nor Contra sources will discuss.

The U.S. officials here, describing the administration's assessment of Nicaragua's reasons for moving into Honduras, said that in addition to providing the rebels with access to supplies, Honduras also has begun allowing the rebels to use infiltration routes into Nicaragua in western Honduras.

Demonstration leads to 91 arrests

BERKELEY, Calif. - Anti-apartheid demonstrators hurled bottles, rocks and eggs at baton-wielding police officers Thursday in a clash which led to 91 arrests, 29 injuries and destruction of a shantytown on the University of California campus.

Two men were arrested for allegedly possessing firebombs after police received a threat that California Hall would be burned down, and charred paper was found stuffed in the gas tanks of three university cars, authorities reported. The conflict began before dawn when police placed dozens of demonstrators into buses to be taken to Alameda County's Santa Rita jail, said university spokesman Ray Colvig. Hundreds of other protesters surrounded the buses, preventing them from moving.

At about 7:30 a.m., police in riot gear cleared a path through the crowd. Fighting broke out as demonstrators hurled bottles, rocks and eggs and blocked the buses by hurling trash cans, setting up makeshift barricades and sitting in the way. Eleven protesters and 18 police officers suffered minor injuries that included cuts and bruises, said university spokesman Tom Debley. Colvig said one of the injured people claimed to be a news photographer.

Senate passes malpractice measure

TOPEKA - Despite cries from opponents that lawmakers were short-circuiting the juducial system, the Senate on Thursday passed, 33-7, a bill which would set a $1 million limit on the amount victims of medical malpractice could be compensated for their injuries.

The bill now returns to the House which will consider changes made by the Senate. If the House accepts the changes, the bill will be sent to Gov. John Carlin to be signed into law or vetoed. Otherwise, a conference committee will be appointed by the two chambers to hash out a compromise. Carlin is venemently opposed to the $1 million cap and has threatened to veto it.

The bill actually contains two caps: it will restrict all damages to $1 million, unless a jury finds a victim can expect medical bills in excess of that amount. In those cases, the bill limits to $3 million the amount the Health Care Stabilization Fund will spend paying a victims' medical bills

Lawmakers are looking for a way to protect the solvency of the health care fund, which pays malpractice awards and settlements which exceed $200,000, and reduce medical malpractice insurance premiums paid by doctors.

Senate delays action to acquire computer

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate voted to postpone making a final decision on the purchase of a computer for the Student Government Services Office until April 29 at its meeting Thursday night in the Union Big Eight room.

The postponement was moved by Cath Sayler, non-degree graduate student, so more research can be done on the proposed computer.

"We can get this computer in just a few weeks, so putting it off by a few weeks isn't going to hurt us," Sayler said. "I'd like everyone to go through tentative allocations before voting on this so you have a better base to make decisions from.'

As proposed, the bill asks for the funds for the computer to be taken from the Long Range Reserves for Capital Outlay account. If the computer was purchased with money from this account, it would have to be purchased on state contract.

"I think it's a good idea to delay this," said Brett Bromich, junior in business administration. "If we tional programs.

Safety precautions regulate 'Fite Nite'

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

Long before the bell signals the first round of the annual Sigma Phi Epsilon "Fite Nite" Sunday night, the toughest punches may have already been thrown.

In recent years the "Fite Nite" tournament has come under fire because of concern about the safety of the fights, but extra steps will be taken this year to ensure that the tournament will be as safe as possible, said Whit Welch, junior in social work and director of the tournament.

These extra steps are being taken because of the opposition by the Riley County Medical Society which has expressed the opinion that the tournament is not safe.

Dr. J.T. Philipp, vice president of the medical society, said the group made a public statement opposing the boxing tournament so that there would be no question in their position, especially if anything happened in the future during one of the fights.

The group decided to publicly oppose the event because several members of the society treated "Fite Nite" participants for what they thought were potentially serious injuries last year.

Welch said the fraternity has not heard from the medical society this year. However, the fraternity has taken extra precautions concerning the safety of the fights.

"We are going by Golden Gloves standards, but we implemented a few extra rules to make it safer," Welch said.

These precautions include having participants weigh in a week early and having two emergency room physicians present during the fights, he said.

The money made from the boxing tournament will be donated to the American Heart Association, Mary Lindquist, president of the Manhattan chapter, said the heart association accepts the donated funds, but said it is not a co-sponsor of the

The heart association clarified its position with "Fite Nite" because of the opposition of the Riley County Medical Society.

The heart association helped the fraternity find the physicians by contracting Spectrum, a service organization that provides physicians to monitor the fights.

Forty-five members from fourteen fraternities will participate in the "Fite Nite" tournament at 7 p.m. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in Mannequins. The fraternity moved to this location because the Elk's lodge, previous site for the fights, is being sold.

Welch said the move will make the atmosphere more professional, resembling boxing tournaments in Las Vegas nightclubs.

James Beasley, executive director of the Kansas-Oklahoma Golden Glove district, said, "I feel Sig Ep 'Fite Nite' is a very positive program. It is not dangerous and everyone has a lot of fun.

"The competition is only dangerous when you have experienced men fighting inexperienced men which is not the case here," he said, adding that the Golden Glove organization will be operating in an assistance role during the fights.

Golden Glove referees have refereed the tournaments for the last three or four years, Welch said.

"We want to donate as much money as possible, making sure that no one gets hurt and everyone has a good time," Welch said. "The bottom line is still helping the heart associa-

Libyan confrontation to provoke terrorism

Will the real winner of the Libya-U.S. confrontation please stand up?

Both President Reagan and Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy would quickly rise to their feet if asked such a question. Khadafy does not hesitate to proclaim, "We humiliated America and its forces," and boast that his "line of death" prevented U.S. forces from entering the Gulf of Sidra.

On the other hand, U.S. warships crossed the so-called line of death into waters which Libya considers its territory and remained unharmed for 75 hours. The United States responded to a Libyan surface-to-air attack on U.S. planes with its own missiles and ended the smaller country's terrorizing efforts.

However, the silencing of Libyan forces has only been temporary. Libya's allies are rallying behind Khadafy. "America is our target," proclaimed Abu Nidal, leader of the Palestinian faction thought to be responsible the Rome and Vienna airports.

Reagan's reply was one of tries. strength, but not of caution: "The United States will not be intimidated by new threats of terrorism." According to a recent poll, Americans agree - 63 percent said they believed the action against Libya was worthwhile even if it causes more terrorism against the United States.

Indeed, Reagan's effort may have done no more than to encourage further terrorism from Khadafy and other anti-American countries.

Americans must reverse the prevalent aggressive attitude toward terrorism and encourage for terrorism last Christmas in U.S. leaders to negotiate on peaceful terms with hostile coun-

Easter spirit ends with income tax

There is a certain irony in the seasonal proximity of Good Friday and April 15, the income tax return filing deadline.

One reason Americans like Easter is probably because the celebration of Christ's resurrection is an optimistic time.

After the Easter celebration, however, optimism begins to fade, and we return once more to the task of defending our meager incomes from further taxation by governmental vultures

Outwitting federal fowl takes time, energy, money and good tax consultants - all of which are in short supply. But taking the time to gain at least a basic understanding of tax laws and regulations is well worth the effort. Students, especially, should be concerned with getting a grasp on the subject.

Because most undergraduate students are between the ages of 18 and 22 and live in abject poverty, it is commonly believed that they either don't have to file a return (unless they get some money back) or they can handle filling out the 1040, 1040-A, and 1040-EZ forms alone

This is not always true. It has become increasingly apparent that 18- to 22-year-old students should be concerned with not only the fact that the IRS wants to know what we're up to but also that laws and definitions dealing with financial aid, work-study and taxable income are extremely messy and could cause problems with accurate returns. Students receiving any type of financial aid are thrown into a unique tax situation. Financial aid is not supposed to be included as taxable income on a tax return but the IRS does not clearly define financial aid and neglects to mention everything it includes.

Students who receive Pell Grants, SEOGs, BEOGs and scholarships are often confused as to whether these are legally considered income. Work-study, however, falls under some of the most conflicting and controversial regulations.

By definition, if a student is receiving any other type of federally assisted or administered monies, then work-study is considered financial aid and therefore should be exempt from state and federal taxes.

Financial aid personnel, on the other hand, argue consistently that work-study is a wage and should therefore be considered taxable income. There is some question about this viewpoint since federally supported workstudy funds are exempt from taxes under section 117 of the IRS tax code

Inconsistencies in tax regulations can lead everyone astray but obviously conflicts with how grants, scholarships and federal support programs affect students the most dramatically.

Most commonly students neglect to insist that all regular taxes be taken out of assistantship and work-study checks at the time of issuance. At the end of the year we end up paying a huge sum (anything more than $50) of money to the government who is taxing us on the money they originally allotted us to earn as work-study students.

Upperclass students have an even better time explaining to the IRS that their assistantships in research or teaching should be non-taxable because they are stipends. The federal government isn't buying it.

bill to Uncle Sam next spring they should not claim exemption.

Friday, April 4, 1986 - 4

Tax regulations and definitions have always been hard to understand because they are simply not written in layman's terms. But just because the written language of the IRS seems illogical and unlearnable does not mean we can ignore it and it will go

Learning how to organize and keep records for tax purposes is essential to staying out of trouble with the IRS and filing accurate returns. Consultants say that students should file their returns as quickly as possible in January. Two benefits would result from this: Students should get their refunds back by mid-March (in time for spring break) and they will have a completed tax return from which to file financial aid application forms. The ACT-FFS specifically requests information from either an estimated or completed

There can also be additional benefits in seeking professional help to file your return. Even if you are a student who feels completely competent in filing your own tax return, it never hurts to have a professional tax consultant check your work. In addition to reviewing your form, consultants can sometimes find deductions for students who are not aware of them.

For students who would rather not, for one reason or another, pay a tax consultant a nominal fee ($20-$25) there are volunteer tax aids like the one available Mondays and Thursdays from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Union.

Since students usually do not have the background or experience necessary to comprehend tax terminology, it is best they seek help and avoid nasty surprises the IRS holds in store for offenders. Remember Jimmy

Student body president requests participation

Writing a column for the Collegian indeed reinforces my decision not to become a journalist. Those of you who venture to read this article will most likely agree that this decision was wise after assessing my skill (or lack thereof) in writing this column. I'll make an attempt to keep this both brief and interesting, yet still inform you of what is going on in my little corner of the Union.

First of all, I want to thank all of you who turned in applications for various appointments. Participation in student government is always appreciated. I have finally completed the task of appointing positions, and all of you who applied should receive a letter informing you of my decision within the next few days. My only regret is that I did not have positions available for all of you. Everyone who applied made the decisions very tough, as there were so many qualified applicants. I would strongly encourage your continued interest, participation and input

There are positions on the Athletic Fee Task Force which have just become available. You will have to submit an application to the Student Senate chair for these positions. If you are interested in the athletic fee this would be a great opportunity to research the issue and have an impact on Another opportunity for involvement is to be student body president for a day. This is a project of the Senate Communications Committee. We plan for him to have lunch in the Stateroom, and then he will be introduced in the Courtyard. After he finishes his address, he will spend the remainder of the time meeting with you, and giving you an opportunity to discuss your concerns. He is working to get out and talk with you, and I would encourage everyone to take advantage of

Finally, I have been trying to get back out to you through visitations. If you would like to have me visit with your organization, please contact Gary Stark to set up a time. African nation needs U.S. support

Although many feel the only communist expansion threat is in Central America, there are many other places around the world where the growth of Democracy is being stunted by Castro's and Gorbachev's surrogate armies.

One of these places is Angola, a nation that is strategically vital to the West for a number of reasons - one being the simple balance of power in southern Africa. A more immediate reason is that the majority of the world's strategic mineral reserves are located in the region. Once a colony of Portugal, Angola was granted independence in 1975 with the signing of the Alvor Agreement by Portugal which called for democratic elections and transferred power to three competing Angolan political groups: the Movemento Popular de Libertacao de Angola, the Frente Nacional de Libertacao de Angola and Uniaco Nacional de Independencia Total de

Under the direction of the Soviet Union, the MPLA brought 13,000 Cuban troops, Soviet military advisers and high-tech Soviet-bloc military equipment into Angola, successfully seizing power and eliminating the FNLA in the manner that the Soviets do things best, through military suppression. UNITA, led by Dr. Jonas Savimbi, turned to the West for aid; unfortunately, aid from America was not forthcoming. However, UNITA did receive aid from a few more established African nations. One of these nations was South Africa, which raised the evebrows of those opposed to apartheid. Savimbi, himself a black, pointed out that he, too, "detested" apartheid, but he did not find it to be a threat to other nations, unlike com-

50,000-strong anti-communist popular army. In the meantime the ruling MPLA took steps typical of communist governments. Religious beliefs became outlawed, and to no surprise, the Angolan economy suffered greatly. Angola was once a food exporter. Now the country must import 90 percent of its food. The nation's once prosperous gold and diamond mines now lose money. Savimbi noted, "Only communists could turn mining into a losing proposition.'

UNITA now controls roughly one-third of Angola, but the Soviets and Cubans are stepping up their military operations to attempt further suppression of the freedom fighters. More than 35,000 Cuban troops are in Angola and these communist forces are receiving masses of Soviet arms including tanks, jet fighters, bombers and helicopter gunships. Soviet military personnel are planning, directing and carrying out ground and air combat operations against UNITA freedom fighting forces Although much of the economic aid that enables the Angolan communists to wage this war against UNITA comes from the Soviet Union, the American firm Gulf Oil, a division of Chevron, provides the government with 96 percent of its revenues. It should come as no surprise that Gulf Oil has lobbied against aid to UNITA, fearing that a victory over the communist government could disturb their healthy profits.

We must send aid to the Angolan anticommunist freedom fighters for three reasons: one, to protect American interest in strategically vital southern Africa; two, to turn back communist aggression no matter what form or shape it appears in; third, to signal to developing nations that there is hope for democracy and that America will do what ever it takes to instill freedom throughout the world.

America is the appointed leader of the free world and many of the world's freedomseeking nations turn to us for support. Among the last words penned by President John F. Kennedy was the speech he was to deliver in Dallas the day of his assassination, "...our mission in the world is to carry the message of truth and freedom to all the far corners of the earth. We in this country are, by destiny rather than choice, the watchmen on the walls of world freedom." President Kennedy, in his foresight, realized the necessity in repealing the growing surge of communism in all areas of the world.

While the cost of a cup of coffee has been more than a dime for some time, recent increases in wholesale prices have caused consumer coffee prices to rise even further.

Union Food Service is one retailer who has passed the wholesale increase on to the consumer.

Malley Sisson, food service director, said the increasing prices, combined with rising labors costs, prompted the 20 percent increase in coffee prices in the cafeteria.

Sisson said the Union had not raised its coffee prices in the six years she has been here. But the recent coffee crop failure in Brazil has forced wholesalers to increase their prices, which in turn forced the Union to increase its prices.

The Union has also increased its prices for "out orders" of coffee from $6.50 per gallon to $7 per gallon. Sisson said she hasn't seen a noticeable drop in coffee consumption since the prices increased from 25 cents to 30 cents per cup.

"When we implemented the price increase, it was right before spring break, and then we had the Easter weekend. Also, with the hot weather we've been having, we haven't sold as much as at this time last year," she said. "But we feel we aren't seeing a decrease in coffee buying."

Laura Phillips, manager of Mini Mart Convenience Store, 1102 Laramie St., said she thinks the rising prices won't deter coffee drinkers.

"Coffee drinkers are still going to buy a cup of coffee no matter what the price is," she said.

Local grocery stores, also affected by rising coffee costs, have passed on increased prices.

Gary Kearby, manager for Poyntz Pantry Dutch Maid Supermarket, 1522 Poyntz Ave., said coffee prices have risen by about $1 per pound in the past month, and some consumers have changed their coffee-buying habits to buy smaller amounts.

Ben Chilcutt, manager for Safeway Stores Inc., at their 3011 Anderson Ave. location, said he thinks coffee prices have begun to price increase four weeks ago.

"(Our buyers) say consumers fears have caused the increase and as soon as the market stabilizes, prices will go back down," he said.

Georgia Larmore, restaurant manager for Country Kitchen, 420 Tuttle Creek Blvd., said she hasn't had to raise the price of coffee even though her wholesale costs have risen by about 60 cents per pound.

Charles Kearby, owner of Kearby's Restaurant Inc., on Highway 24 east of Manhattan, said stabilize since an initial 30 percent he has not increased coffee prices either.

"If (wholesale costs) keep increasing, though, we will (have to raise our price)," he said. Kearby said the alternatives would be to increase prices somewhere else or cut back in other areas.

Although a golden-brown tan may look great now, the hazards of tanning begin several years later when the after effects set in.

"The basic hazards are not so much what you're going to do to your body right now but what will happen in years to come," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

"The more exposure you have increases your chances of skin cancer, developing wrinkles later in life and developing leather skin," she said.

At a recent American Cancer Society seminar for writers, doctors reported that even one case of severe sunburn during childhood can at least double the risk for melanoma, according to an article in the April 7 issue of U.S. News & World Report. Melanoma is the most common and injurious form of skin cancer.

A brochure prepared by the society lists several visible warnings for detecting skin cancer. Among them are: a sore that does not heal, change in size or color of a wart or mole and a development of any unusual pigmented area.

The society says the end result of overexposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays is prematurely aged skin. With enough time, the sun weakens the skin's elasticity, and can also cause dark patches and scaly, gray growths called keratoses, which are often pre-cancerous.

The society says there are more than 300,000 cases of skin cancer reported each year, which if treated in time may be curable.

Burke said people can be in the sun safely if they follow a few precautionary measures. The most effective prevention, she said, is to monitor the amount of time one spends in the sun and gradually increase it. Burke said the other method for preventing damage by the sun is to wear a sun screen.

"This can keep out the burning rays while at the same time give you the sun you need for tanning," she

Manhattan dermatologist Robert Cathey said another preventive method from overexposure is to limit outdoor activities between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. This is when the sun gives off the most burning rays.

He also suggested individuals use common sense when outdoors. He said it is better to be active in the sun than to just lie out.

These precautions should also be taken while using the artificial tanning beds found at many local tannn-

"Safety wise they are pretty safe since you're limited to the amount of time that you spend in them," Burke said. "But I do have some reservations about tanning beds besides the aspects of tanning, and these are health issues."

Burke described the tanning bed as place to "harbor bacteria," because it is warm and moist.

"Unless they use a very, very good cleaning technique, what's going to get rid of the bacteria?" Burke ask-

Burke said women who are menstruating are even more susceptible to collecting bacteria. She said most will go home and not even realize where they picked up the Local tanning salons offer several preventive measures customers can use while tanning.

Greg Harris, junior in architectural engineering and employee of Southern Sun, 519 N. 12th St., said they require everyone to wear sun

"We strongly recommend that people do wear them even though we can't force them to," he said.

Harris also said they carefully monitor the time limits so people

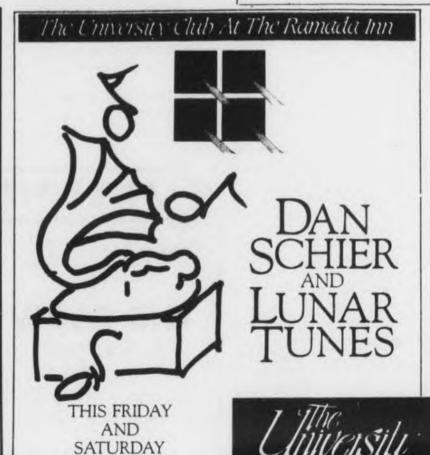

Cathey said he diagnoses a case of skin cancer every other day, with a majority being sun-related although he notes there are several causes.

Station raises money for radio equipment

By DAN SMITH Collegian Reporter

A 21/2-foot stuffed gorilla and a Cabbage Patch telephone are proving to be profitable for KSDB-

These are only two of the many items KSDB has been selling on the air this week during its auction to raise money for a new translator.

With only one more day left, the radio station's auction had made $505 as of 11 a.m. Thursday.

The auction, which started Tuesday and continues until 9 p.m. Saturday, has also sold such items as a room at the Holidome in Manhattan, valued at $60, as well as the phone, donated by the Phone Connection; the gorilla, donated by Varney's Book Store; and other merchants' gifts.

"The merchants of Manhattan have been wonderful in donating items to us," said David Mac-Farland, associate professor of journalism and mass communications. "Other people call in and just want to give us money."

Members of KSDB and a group of journalism and mass communications students thought of the idea for the auction in November and have been meeting every Monday night since to prepare for the auction.

MacFarland said he expects to make just under $1,000 when the auction ends. The money will be used primarily for KSDB's changing of frequencies from 88.1 FM to 91.9 FM, a move that was forced by the Federal Communications Commission, and for the new translator which will be 300 feet above the current one. This will give the station more power.

The new translator was donated by KAKE-TV in Wichita and is valued at $47,000.

"With this new translator, we will be able to reach places like Wamego, Topeka, Salina, Junction City and other cities surroun-ding Manhattan," MacFarland said. "It will give us four times the power we have now.'

The auction will be on the air again at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. today. There will be a live remote from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. Saturday in the Union, and from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m. at Charlies Neighborhood

Research helping monkeys eat in style

By SAM HOSTETTLER Collegian Reporter

In the wild, Langur monkeys feed on leaves and fruit. At the San Diego Zoo, they are eating in style, thanks to K-State's Department of Grain

Science and Industry. "We were contacted about three years ago to formulate a diet for the Langur monkey species at the San Diego Zoo," said Keith Behnke, associate professor of grain science and industry. "The monkey doesn't adapt well to the monkey biscuits on the commercial market." Langur monkeys are found primarily in Asia and have primitive foregut digestive systems much like

K-State was contacted by Duane Ullrey, a nutritionist in the animal science department at Michigan State University. Ullrey was studying the problem of the Langur food and discovered not only did the Langurs' diet need to be low in iron, but the food needed to be in the shape of a biscuit, not a pellet. The Langurs don't have thumbs, so a biscuit would be much easier for them to grasp.

"We have a machine here at K-State called The Extruder that shapes the ingredients into a biscuit." Behnke said. "This is one advantage we have over the others in manufacturing the feed. We also have an interest in doing this kind of receledadadadadadada

These ingredients are milled together and "cooked" with water to form a dough. The formula is then forced through The Extruder and made into biscuits.

'We are making the formula with a high level of sugar now," Behnke said. "The animals like something sweet. The formula doesn't taste bad. It tastes almost like cereal for

"We have also sent test samples to the zoos in St. Louis and Chicago," Behnke said. "The results are very encouraging.' Behnke said the department is making plans to commercialize the formula, but he is not worried about the payback.

"This is a small project right now," Behnke said. "Our biggest payback right now is our reputation for cooperation. The project also gives the students a look at a scientific approach to a practical problem.'

OSU offers big challenge for Wildcats

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

K-State's 60-game baseball schedule is half over and the Wildcats are playing .500 ball. The last half of the season promises to be just as challenging as the first half and it begins today against Oklahoma State.

Coach Gary Vaught isn't shaking at the thought of playing the No. 15 Cowboys in Stillwater, Okla.

"We've got to hang in there and go get them. I'm hoping we can come back with some wins. We sure are due to get some breaks," Vaught said.

The Cowboys are anxious to mark some wins against the 'Cats. The Oklahoma Sooners took three-of-four from Oklahoma State last weekend. The Cowboys are going to have to sweep teams at home if it intends to protect its five-year choke hold on the Big Eight Conference title.

Oklahoma State coach Gary Ward knows the Wildcats are capable of playing good ball and will probably be in the top half of the conference standings at season's end.

"K-State will be a threat. Gary Vaught is a step ahead, and he'll challenge somebody for that three or four hole in the league," Ward

And that just isn't friendly talk - the Oklahoma State coaching staff realizes how important the series is. When K-State faced Oral Roberts Tuesday, the Cowboy coaching staff was in the stands scouting the Wildcats.

"I told the other coaches, 'How many times in the past has Oklahoma State showed up to scout us?' I told the kids that it should tell them a little bit," Vaught said. Vaught thinks his team is good enough to leave Stillwater with a win or two in the fourgame series.

"They know they've got to win and we know we've got to win," Vaught said.

K-State will throw Rocky Ferguson in the first game. The remainder of the rotation is still undecided, but Tom Smith will throw one game.

Vaught likes who the Cowboys are pitching against K-State this weekend predominantly fastball throwers. But Vaught knows good hitting won't assure victories.

"I think we'll hit the fastball. We're a fastball hitting club. The thing about O-State is you can't commit the errors to give them a second chance. When they get a second chance, they're liable to get you," Vaught

Strength up the middle key to KC's success

The title defense is about to begin.

The pride of the Midwest, the Kansas City Royals, will begin their defense of the World Championship of Major League Baseball when they open the season Tuesday in New York against the Yankees.

As the Pittsburgh Pirates, Philadelphia Phillies, Los Angeles Dodgers, St. Louis Cardinals, Baltimore Orioles and Detroit Tigers will tell you, defending a world title is not at all easy. Each of these teams has won a championship since 1979, and none has repeated the following season.

But the very fact that these teams were champions says that they were doing something right. What did all of these clubs have in common? What was the key ingredient to the ultimate success of each of these teams? Strength up the middle, plain and simple.

Let's look at the champions of the past two years to illustrate my point.

DAVID SVOBODA Editor

The 1984 champs, the Detroit Tigers, were led by catcher Lance Parrish, second baseman Lou Whitaker, shortstop Alan Trammell and center fielder Chet Lemon.

A walk down memory lane, painful though it may be, is in order. It is the first game of the 1984 American League Championship Series at Royals Stadium in Kansas City.

The Tigers pounce on the Royals 8-1 and take a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five series. Trammell and Parrish hit home runs and Trammell is credited with the game winning run batted in.

Enough with Detroit. A look at Royal history might bring the point across even

Last year's club wasn't flashy up the middle, but Jim Sundberg, Frank White, Buddy Biancalana and Willie Wilson got the job done in the playoffs and Series and Kansas City had its first title.

Who can forget Sundberg's three-run triple off the top of the fence against Toronto in Game Seven of the playoffs or Biancalana's brilliant defensive play against St. Louis in the Series?

The 1980 Royals were the American League Champions, but the club was hurt in the Series by a lack of consistent play from White (who had won the A.L.C.S. Most Valuable Player award for his play against New York) and catchers Darrell Porter and John Wathan.

Center fielder Amos Otis led the Royal offensive attack in the Series loss to Philadelphia, hitting .478, but his efforts weren't enough to help the Royals capture an elusive first title.

My crystal ball might be a bit cloudy, but one thing is for sure - the loss of center fielder Pedro Guerrero (who was moved over from left at the start of spring training) for three months because of a knee injury is something the Los Angeles Dodgers will feel come September. You just can't get it done with out solidity up the middle.

Just ask yourself who plays second base and shortstop for the New York Mets. arguably the best team that hasn't made the playoffs in the last few years. Now you know why strength up the middle is the difference between the penthouse and one step

Kansas City Royals second baseman Frank White dives for a batted ball during game three Stadium. The Royals, out to defend the World Series title, play the New York Yankees of the 1985 American League Championship Series against the Toronto Blue Jays in Royals Tuesday in the first game of the season for both teams in New York.

Briefly in Sports

LA's Guerrero to miss 3 months of season

VERO BEACH, Fla. - Pedro Guerrero, who hit .320 and blasted 33 home runs to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to the National League West championship last season, suffered a severe knee injury Thursday and will be sidelined for at least the first three months of the 1986 campaign.

Guerrero was trying to steal third base in the bottom of the first inning as part of a double steal in the Dodgers' exhibition game against the Atlanta Braves when his spikes apparently caught in the dirt, causing the injury.

Tennis teams to play Sooners, Cowboys

The men's and women's tennis teams travel to Norman, Okla., to take on the consistently tough Sooners in the 'Cats' Big Eight Conference opening dual today. The matches are scheduled to get under way at 1 p.m.

Following the dual with Oklahoma, the Wildcats travel to Stillwater, Okla. to face last year's Big Eight Conference champions on Saturday.

The men are currently 4-7 on the young season, while the women sport an 2-7 mark

Ueberroth lessens Andujar's suspension

PHOENIX, Ariz. - Joaquin Andujar, who was scheduled to begin the baseball season under a 10-day suspension, has had the penalty reduced to five days by Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and will pitch his first game on April 12, the Oakland A's announced Thursday.

The right-handed pitcher, acquired from the St. Louis Cardinals in a December trade, had appealed the suspension he drew for his outburst in the final game of the Track team prepares for own meet

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

Coach Steve Miller will be staying with his plan this weekend when the men's and women's track and field teams compete Saturday in the Kansas State Invitational.

Miller has his athletes on a schedule to begin peaking at the Kansas Relays two weeks from today in Lawrence. He is using Saturday's invitational at R.V. Christian Track to prevent many of his top men's and women's performers from "burning out," while still giving them a chance to compete just not in their specialty events.

"It gives us an opportunity in a non-scoring competition to go in 'unpressured' and do what we want to do," Miller said. "We can afford to change people around and not worry about it.

"We're really now beginning to point to the Drake Relays, a little emphasis on the Kansas Relays, but more to Drake. And then from Drake on, we start considering that the meat and potatoes of our season.'

The team traveled last week to Gainesville, Fla. for the Florida Relays and two weeks ago to Baton Rouge, La. for the Paper Tiger Invitational. Miller said this week and next week where no event has yet been scheduled, will provide somewhat of a

"When you have a plan, you really have got to stick to it," he said. "In order to be successful, you've got to have some lulls in your season. The next two weeks are a little bit of a lull."

NCAA long jump champion Kenny Harrison will be taking a break from his specialty this week and compete only in the triple

Harrison took second in the Florida Relays in the long jump, but won the triple jump there with a school record leap of 54-8 1/4.

Big Eight champion 3,000-meter steeplechase runner Mike Rogers will compete in the 800 meter and 1,500 meter runs, while Bryan Carroll, who normally competes in the 5,000 meters, will compete in the steeplechase.

Miller said he hopes running Rogers in the 800 and 1,500 will help Rogers gain a little more speed. Carroll, on the other hand, may be seeing more action in the steeplechase as the season goes on, possibly in the Big Eight outdoor meet. Two of the top women's stars, high jumper Rita Graves and 400 -meter runner Michelle Maxey, are unlikely to compete Saturday. Maxey has been fighting illness for the past two weeks. Graves, who broke the school record with a 6-11/2 jump last week at Florida, will probably sit the meet out for rest purposes.

Jacque Struckhoff and Chris Vanatta have both qualified for the National Collegiate Athletics Association meet at 3,000, 5,000, and 10,000 meters, but won't compete in any of those races Saturday. Struckhoff is set at 1,500 meters and Vanatta will race in the 800 meter run.

K-State 1,500 and 3,000 meter runner Anne Stadler is scheduled to compete in the 5,000

The day's events are scheduled to start in the morning at 10 with the field events and continue with track preliminaries at 11 and finals at 12:30.

McCain to host orchestra

By SHELLY CHENOWETH Staff Writer

As part of its first North American tour, the Dresden Chamber Orchestra from East Germany will perform at 8 p.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium.

The orchestra is "one of the fine orchestras of East Germany," said Chappell White, professor of music. "They are really a top-notch group. Dresden has always been a city of culture, and this group is following a fine tradition they are still very much aware of."

The group comprises 22 members, including the leader, Manfred

Scherzer is a soloist of international fame, and one of the most prominent artists of East Germany, said Richard Diehl, director of McCain Auditorium.

Scherzer has appeared throughout Europe, as well as in the United States, Japan, South America and Debuting in 1978, the Dresden Chamber Orchestra has the foremost string players of East Germany, Diehl said.

They perform annually at the Dresden Music Festival, and they have played in Czechoslovakia, West Germany, Yugoslavia and Japan.

The chamber orchestra's program will include Sonata No. 6 in D Major by Rossini, Divertimento in B-flat Major, K. 137 by Mozart, Chamber Symphony for string Orchestra by Shostakovich, and Serenage for Strings in E major, Op. 22 by Dvorak.

"Often chamber orchestras choose a repetoire from largely early 18thcentury work, because in this time period music was written for this size of orchestra. But this program was carefully selected from several eras," White said.

In a general sense, chamber music is written for relatively small gatherings, White said. It can be contrasted with church music, or music for a larger audience.

There were three types of music in the early 18th century, White said, theater, chamber and church music. The chamber music was primarily for aristocratic society.

This general meaning can be applied to a small orchestra, White

In a more specific sense, chamber music is distinguished by the fact that each player has a separate part.

The Dresden Chamber Orchestra can be considered a small orchestra, White said, because there is more than one player on each part.

"From the listener's standpoint, the difference is that the music is for a more intimate gathering. It may produce smaller effects, but effects of delicacy, intricacy of texture. The pieces will show loudness and weight are not necessary for brilliance and impressive effects," White said.

Chamber music is sometimes a piece in which the composer pressures himself, White said, because he can't make mistakes in music for small groups.

Area may see mill levy increase

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan area residents could experience an increase in the mill levy if Gov. John Carlin signs into law a school finance bill approved by the Senate Monday.

Hal Rowe, superintendent of Unified School District 383, said the bill would give the district a budget authority of an additional $1.2 million, but additional state aid of only about $100,000.

The additional funds would come from a mill levy increase of an anticipated seven to eight mills. Currently the total district levy is 68.66

Included in the bill is a switching of state aid to rural and oil-region districts where the declining farm economy and dropping oil prices have reduced some districts' wealth.

"We're becoming slightly wealthy, so we lose a percentage of revenue from the state," Rowe said.

In the 1982-83 school year the district received 53 percent of revenues from state aid. This year, Rowe said, 47 percent of the revenues are coming from state Richard McKittrick, school district clerk, described the Legislature's action as "a reflection of the financial situation of the state.

The bill includes a change in the percentage by which a district is allowed to increase its budget. Currently school districts can raise their budgets by 5 percent or 15 percent.

Main Street resource group to present recommendations

By The Collegian Staff

As a part of Manhattan's designation as a national Main Street City, the organization's resource team is to present a report to area residents

Brenda Spencer, project manager for Manhattan, said the team, which has been in town since Tuesday, will be developing a report with recommendations concerning the direction for the local Main Street project and issues to be addressed and resolved. The team's recommendations and findings are to be presented at 7:30 p.m. in the County Commission Room of the County Office Building, Fifth and Humboldt streets.

Members of the resource team are John Ambrose, of Retail and Marketing Services Inc., West Bloomfield, Mich.; Jill Sprenkle, marketing director of Franklin Park Mall, Toledo, Ohio; Mac Nichols, program associate of National Main Street Center, Washington, D.C. and Loren Medely, state coordinator for the Kansas Main Street Project, a division of the Kansas Department of Economic Development, Topeka.

Manhattan was chosen last fall as one of five Kansas communities to receive the designation. The selfhelp downtown revitalization program is based on a four-point approach of organization, promotion, design and economic restructuring.

Downtown redevelopment causes detours, permanent street closings

By The Collegian Staff

The redevelopment of downtown Manhattan has caused several traffic changes in the area, said project design supervisor Todd Thalmann.

Permanently closed streets include Third Street between Humboldt and Pierre streets, and Third Street between Houston and Pierre streets. The two streets will eventually become part of the proposed Town Center Mall's parking lot.

Another permanent closing is Second Street north of Humboldt Street, which will become part of the Southern Arterial Project. The arterial will be a four-lane street connecting Fort Riley and Tuttle Creek boulevards.

New traffic signals have been installed at the intersections of Third and Leavenworth streets; Fourth and Leavenworth streets; and Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Leavenworth Street.

Traffic from U.S. Highways 24 and 77 can enter the downtown area via Leavenworth and Fourth Thalmann said motorists should be cautious when approaching the "L-shaped" intersection resulting from Third Street being closed to the center of Poyntz Avenue.

Thespians to perform hall fund-raiser

By NANCY CASE Collegian Reporter

Putnam Hall Governing Board will present The Complex Improvisational Theatre, a comedy/theater group, at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Union Catskellar

The benefit will raise money for programming for Putnam Hall

"We're hoping for a few hundred dollars," said Colin Hickey, junior in political science and publicity chairman for Putnam.

'We put on programs about how to get a job, how to dress right for an interview, rape awareness and how to Hickey said.

Putnam is a residence hall where students must abide by certain rules. "We have a special RESPECT program," Hickey said.

The respect program is based around two major ideas: You have the right to sleep and study at any

Hickey said the hall also wants to keep students involved in campus and the residence hall activities.

The Complex is based in Manhattan, and was chosen for the fundraiser because they're popular on campus and are very cooperative and willing to bend over backwards to help us, Hickey said.

The group is made up of three members; Dr. Rick Efros, who received his degree in counseling from K-State, Mike Musik and John Winningham both graduated in theater from K-State.

The Complex began in the late 1970s as The Not Necessarily Ready for K-State Players, and mainly performed a lot of "Saturday Night Live"-type skits, Winningham said.

The size of the group began to decrease as members started pursuing other interests and the group moved away from any affiliation with the University.

"Now we're a three-man show. It's a lot more work, but there's a lot more rewards because you are putting a lot more in," Winninghan said.

Most of the time the group takes suggestions from the audience on people, places, situations or any weird idea. The group will then make up a skit dealing with the suggestion.

Currently The Complex is doing shows in Nebraska, Colorado, Missouri and Kansas and has a working hour-and-a-half show.

Winningham said they perform some original sketches, but 75 percent to 80 percent of their show is improvised.

Tickets for the show are $3 and are available at the door.

By The Collegian Staff The Department of Political

Science is sponsoring an open forum for 1986 Kansas gubernatorial candidates at 9:30 a.m. Saturday in the Union Catskeller.

The forum, part of University Open House activities, is being coordinated by Jerry Rosenberg, assistant professor of political Candidates scheduled to participate include House Speaker Mike Hayden, R-Atwood, Larry Jones, R-Wichita, Richard Peckam, R-Wichita and Barbara

Pomeroy, R-Whitewater. All announced candidates were invited to participate.

Rosenberg said Lt. Gov. Tom Docking, D-Wichita had prior commitments and was unsure if Secretary of State Jack Brier, R-Topeka, will be participating. Each candidate is scheduled to make opening and closing remarks along with responses to questions from the audience.

A discussion on politics and minorities at 1:30 p.m. and a discussion on international terrorism at 3 p.m. are also scheduled for Saturday in the Catskellar.

AT JOHNSON COUNTY COMMUNITY COLLEGE BECOME A PARALEGAL IN SIX MONTHS

Now that you've got an education, how about paralegal. It's one of the country's fastest growing fields. The number of paralegals employed nation-wide will double in the next 10 years. That's 50,000 new jobs that currently pay from $15,000 to $30,000.

To meet the growing need for paralegals, JCCC has created an accelerated certificate program. Starting with an intensive twomonth session this June, you can earn a certificate by December. The program is open to anyone with a two- or four-year degree who meets admission requirements.

Application deadline for the first accelerated certificate program is May 1, so don't delay. Call the JCCC Admissions Office at 469-3803 for application information.

Talks proceed for peace pact

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The Contadora nations on Sunday discussed a May deadline for signing a Central American peace treaty despite Nicaragua's insistence on a separate non-aggression pact with the United States.

As the 13 Latin American foreign ministers involved in the treaty negotiations entered their second day of talks, Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo Claramount of El Salvador said a consensus was of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, as well as the eight nations that have been directing the peace talks — Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela, Panama, Argentina, Peru, Uruguay and Brazil.

Castillo acknowledged that Nicaragua's Sandinista government was continuing to insist on a separate pact with the United States, with the Nicaraguans saying they needed a guarantee that "U.S. aggression" against their country would stop.

Two veteran musicians put out hot Wax

By LAURIE FAIRBURN Entertainment Editor

There's a song climbing its way up the Top-40 charts these days called "Right Between The Eyes." It positively effervesces as it extols the emotions accompanying new love. It's pretty good - if you're in love...and happy about it.

The duo who sings it, Wax, has much more to offer on its debut album "Magnetic Heaven."

Wax features Graham Gouldman and Andrew Gold, who have been in the music business for some time. Gouldman was once a member of 10cc, and wrote songs for The Yardbirds, Herman's Hermits and The Hollies.

Gold has had some success as a solo artist with hits "Lonely Boy" and "Never Let Her Slip Away." He also arranged and played on most of Linda Ronstadt's hits.

On "Magnetic Heaven," Gouldman and Gold display more maturity than is reflected on "Right Between Eyes," and a diversity of material that hints there was actually some thought put into the material.

Many of the rhythms on the album are strong and made for dancing (or at least some good jamming in the car). "Hear No Evil," "Systematic," and "Breakout" have feverish beats and just the right amount of repetition to give them heavy air-play potential. Still, they are each distinct in theme and spirit.

Sprinkled among these cuts are selections with moderate beats and more spiritual meaning.

"Only a Visitor" reminds us of our mortality: "the time that we shared/make visions surrender back the light/across the air there's no dividing line/a secret world is calling you home tonight.'

There isn't a weak link on this album. Gouldman and Gold have the soul behind their voices to take us through emotions, sensations and realizations. All 10 tracks were written and arranged by the two, and the quality of their performance is outstanding. "Magnetic Heaven" is a debut, but Wax won't stop there.

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The Contadora nations on Sunday discussed a May deadline for signing a Central American peace treaty despite Nicaragua's insistence on a separate non-aggression pact with the United States.

As the 13 Latin American foreign ministers involved in the treaty negotiations entered their second day of talks, Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo Claramount of El Salvador said a consensus was of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, as well as the eight nations that have been directing the peace talks — Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela, Panama, Argentina, Peru, Uruguay and Brazil.

Castillo acknowledged that Nicaragua's Sandinista government was continuing to insist on a separate pact with the United States, with the Nicaraguans saying they needed a guarantee that "U.S. aggression" against their country would stop.

Lubbock, and were principal dance partners then.

"This has been very interesting for both of us. We are able to see how much we have matured in our dancing and perfected our style," Bartush said.

A ballet piece, "Farewell to a Few" will be especially emotional for the dancers. All are graduating seniors or are leaving school and this will be the last time for them to perform together.

"This is just a piece with no story behind it, set to Baroque music," Quirk said, "It just gives the girls a chance to use their pointe work.

The concert will also present a guest performer, 12-year-old Rachael Warren, a private student of Kahlich. He has set a jazz piece for her to the music of Barbra Streisand.

"Rachael's concentration, dedication and focus is incredible for someone so young," Kahlich said, "She's a real joy to work with."

Props play an integral part in some of the pieces. Some props would be considered a little more unusual than most. Bartush had even incorporated the use of a shopping cart in her piece, "Relax," before eventually throwing out the idea.

"I couldn't find the right type of cart and the ones we had were too awkward to use," she said. "I use brooms in the comic duet I set for Luke and Judith." Kahlich, Bartush and Quirk all agree that the time it takes to create a piece varies greatly.

"Some choreographic endeavors take a very short amount of time and fall into place so easy. Other times it will be the week of the performance and you're still figuring out what to do," Bartush said.

Inspiration for their creations arises in various ways. Bartush said that often times she'll hear a poem or envision an idea and will store it away until she hears some music that might work with the concept.

Changes in steps, ideas or music are always occurring, Bartush said. "A choreographer is constantly throwing things out and switching things around until you find what looks right,'

A problem they face is that the studios they rehearse in have little depth, which makes it a difficult to judge what it will look like on a big stage.

"You don't get to see if it looks quite right until you rehearse on stage and get some distance from it. " Bartush said. In past performances, the department hasn't been able to work on stage until about two days before the performance due to the numerous bookings in McCain. "This can be so nerve-wracking," Kahlich said. "I've been there until four in the morning before, just trying to get the technical aspects, like lighting and sound figured out." They feel fortunate this semester, however, since they have been able to rehearse on stage a week in advance. Kahlich said this luxury gives them plenty of time to work out all the kinks.

Initial rehearsals started at the very beginning of the semester. Kahlich said that on the whole his experiences with Kansas audiences have been positive, though he wihes audience attendance would be a little higher.

"This is really going to be a perfect weekend for a performance," Kahlich said. "Open House will draw a lot of people. We are also holding our scholarship auditions this Saturday. It's a great recruitment tool for us."

Tickets for SpringDance Concert '86 are $4 for students and senior citizens and $5 for the general public. Reservations for tickets may be made today at the McCain box office, 532-6428, noon to 5 p.m.

Film Review

'Money Pit' survives with one-joke plot

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

The plot for "The Money Pit" is simple: A yuppie couple, desperate for a place to live, gets what they think is a great deal on a home in the New York City suburbs. When they settle in, the home begins to self-destruct.

That's sort of a one-joke plot, and the joke is repeated throughout the film. But thanks to the fine comedic work of Tom Hanks and Shelley Long, and the intricate sight gags provided bay director Richard Benjamin and screenwriter David Giler, "The Money Pit" makes its one-joke premise pay off. Not all the gags work maybe only half are successful but the gags come at such a fast pace the movie never slows down.

Walter is a lawyer for rock 'n' roll groups. Anna plays viola in an orchestra. They've been living in Anna's ex-husband's apartment while he, an orchestra conductor, is touring in Europe.

When he returns unexpectedly, Walter and Anna are forced to find a home of their own.

The house they buy strikes them as too good to be true. Its market value is $1 million, but the owner, a boozy old lady played by Maureen Stapleton, is willing to part with it for just $200,000. Walter and Anna are suspicious, but they take a tour, find nothing wrong and make the purchase.

Once they move in, the front door falls off its hinges, the staircase collapses, the bathtub faucet spits brown sludge, and the electrical wires ignite inside the walls. And that's just for starters.

Before the house is reduced to a pile of rubble, Walter and Anna call in some contractors to renovate the house. Everything is fine up to here, but the filmmakers run out of ideas. They've done everything they can with the house, so they move on to Walter and Anna's love life.

The movie is excellent at providing slapstick comedy, but the romantic interest is weak. Hanks is a superb physical comedian, but

The closing and eventual censoring of the Union Art Gallery's display of paintings, some of which included nude women, during Friday and Saturday's All-University Open House was "preposterous," said artist Michael Florian Jilg.

Jilg, Fort Hays State University art professor, whose works have been on display since March 24, said Sunday he has never gotten such a negative response about his artwork.

"That's preposterous! They've (the paintings) been in the Fort Hays State faculty art show, they've been in junior colleges and there's never been any reaction like this," he said.

Jilg's exhibit was ordered closed from public view Friday by Union Director Walt Smith

Later Friday, Smith, who could not be reached for comment, allowed the exhibit to be reopened but with black paper covering the sliding doors to the gallery's entrance. This allowed viewers to enter, but prevented the paintings from being seen from outside of the gallery. A sign on the doors alerted onlookers some of the works contained nudity and may not be suitable for young children.

Marilyn Woodward, program viser for the Union Program Council, said the UPC Arts Committee had come to an agreement with Smith and William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, to put up the black paper so the show would not have to be closed.

In addition to the sign, the UPC committee also had a table in front of the gallery to advise people entering of the nature of the display.

Pat Bosco, assistant vice president of educational and student services, said the basic concern expressed by the Union was that people were not given a choice of whether they would or would not see the paintings.

"By draping the glass windows and leaving the billboard (describing the exhibit) the same, people had a choice of whether or not to enter," Bosco said.

"The All-University Open House attracts thousands of people and they're of all ages," he said. "The compromise the UPC art gallery committee made with the administration provided the opportunity to let people decide if they wanted

Bosco said he visited with people who preferred not to enter while he also talked with families who chose to see the display.

The arts committee was not consulted about or informed of the deci-

PANAMA CITY, Panama - The Contadora nations on Sunday discussed a May deadline for signing a Central American peace treaty despite Nicaragua's insistence on a separate non-aggression pact with the United States.

As the 13 Latin American foreign ministers involved in the treaty negotiations entered their second day of talks, Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo Claramount of El Salvador said a consensus was building for an agreement on a signing deadline of May 31.

'We're taking a decision to end the negotiating process and move on to the most important step, a functioning treaty to guarantee the survival of peace in all of Central America," Castillo said.

of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, as well as the eight nations that have been directing the peace talks - Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela, Panama, Argentina, Peru, Uruguay and Brazil.

Castillo acknowledged that Nicaragua's Sandinista government was continuing to insist on a separate pact with the United States, with the Nicaraguans saying they needed a guarantee that "U.S. aggression" against their country would stop.

The position of the others is that this is a bilateral situation and it should not affect the decision of the rest of the countries," Castillo said. "If Nicaragua does not want to sign now, it can be left open for later."

Panama's foreign minister, Jorge Abadia Arias, said a draft could be ready for signing by the five Central American countries by the end of He said that plan had the backing May, despite remaining obstacles.

Tax increase splits 4 GOP candidates

By ERIC RHODENBAUGH Staff Writer

Although four candidates vying for the Republican party's gubernatorial nomination agree Kansas has an outstanding university system, only two support increasing taxes to maintain the network.

The candidates spoke Saturday at a public forum for 1986 gubernatorial candidates in the Union Catskeller. The forum, coordinated by Jerry Rosenberg, was sponsored by the Department of Political Science.

House Speaker Mike Hayden, R-Atwood, said funding for higher education has increased in each of the 14 years he has served as a legislator.

'We're at a crossroads now because in order for higher education funding to continue to increase there has to be a tax increase,"

Hayden said. Hayden said the Legislature is currently looking at a plan to increase faculty salaries about 3 percent and increase operational budgets by about 2 percent. "That plan would require a tax increase," he said.

Larry Jones, R-Wichita, said a comprehensive plan of cooperation between the Regents institutions needs to be developed first, but if "additional tax resources" were required in the future, he would support them.

Richard Peckham, R-Andover, said the state needs to maintain a strong university system, but must also maintain the strong "competitive elements of private schools and universities."

Barbara Pomeroy, R-Whitewater, said the various parts of the higher education system need "to work together to see if we can accomplish more with what we have before we say it's necessary to increase fun-

Pomeroy said part of the review of higher education should include discussion on whether to accept Washburn University into the Regents system. Jones, former chairman of the Board of Regents, said he supports bringing Washburn into the Regents system, but not at the current time. Hayden said he favors admitting Washburn into the Regents system. He said the state currently spends about $5 million per year on Washburn, but has no control over its programs and competition with other Regents schools.

Peckham said the competition was beneficial. He also said "this is not the time to get into financing Washburn at a higher level," citing the state's economic situation.

In regard to deficit-reduction legislation, the four candidates agreed the state and local governments could not pick up all the costs of federal cuts.

Terrorism not new, but changing, University professors say By PATRICIA MALONE Collegian Reporter

Terrorism is neither new nor confined to one area of the world, said Burton Kaufman, professor of history, during an international terrorism panel discussion Saturday.

Also participating in the discussion were Leon Rappoport, professor of psychology, and Michael Suleiman and Alden Williams, professors of political science.

"It (terrorism) goes back to ancient times - 66 A.D. in Palestine," Kaufman said. "The systematic use of terrorism, however, began in the second half of the 19th century. Terrorist groups operate in Russia, France, Italy, Spain and the U.S."

Kaufman said today Americans associate terrorism with the Middle East, whereas in the 1960s they associated it with Latin America. Terrorists in these areas engaged in many of the same tactics terrorists use today, including kidnapping of officials and prominent businessmen and the use of the media to gain attention to the plight and cause of terrorist activities.

Rappoport, who studies the social behavior of extreme behaviorists, said terrorism is primarily a form of psychological warfare and a form of getting people's attention. 'Its purpose is not to simply kill people or take over material objectives, but it's a means of gaining attention and intimidating as well," Rappoport said.

Rappoport explained today's modern society creates terrorists. "It appears that we have more and more conditions in modern life that tend to produce the conditions, and out of those conditions the people who are willing to carry out the classical actions of terrorism, even to the point of destroying themselves along with their target," he said.

Suleiman defined terrorism as "acts of violence to non-military personnel." He said there has been discussion within the Reagan administration about how to deal with "The Reagan administration has been split for some time as to what the proper response should be. There has been one group that is more interested in finding out the causes behind the people who carry out the terrorist act. This group includes Vice President George Bush, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and on and off the joint chiefs-of-staff," Suleiman said. "On the other side is Secretary of State George Shultz and some of his supporters. Suleiman said Shultz and his followers have redefined terrorism. "Terrorism is a form of political violence directed against any and all who believe in the rights of the individual and who seek these in the non-violent give and take of diplomacy...this definition of terrorism applies to violence against democratic regimes," Suleiman

He said this definition can only be used by those who see the world in terms of black and white.

Williams stressed he personally could not find a satisfying definition of terrorism.

The session was sponsored by the Department of Political Science, the KSU United Nations Council and Phi Alpha Theta.

Government suspects Khadafy of club bombing

Ganschow told a news conference that investigators continued to zero in on leftist and foreign terrorist groups, but "no concrete clues" surfaced to identify the bombers.

Defense secretary visits Philippines

MANILA, Philippines - Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger on Sunday became the first U.S. Cabinet official to visit the Philippines since President Corazon Aquino and rebellious military officers ousted Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and armed forces chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos welcomed Weinberger at the Old Manila International Airport at the start of his two-day visit.

Enrile and Ramos led a military revolt that helped drive Marcos from the presidential palace and end his 20 years in power on Feb. 25. Marcos left the Philippines the next day to begin his exile in U.S. Embassy spokesman Allan Croghan declined to say whether Weinberger will discuss a defense aid package for te Philippines or a recent strike in which Filipino workers barricaded the gates of the largest U.S. military outposts overseas.

However, Croghan said the embassy has welcomed Aquino's efforts to reform the Philippine military into a "force that is professional with professional ethics, good leadership and properly supplied and

Last Tuesday, Aquino dismissed 39 generals and colonels in her first major move to reform a defense force allegedly guilty of widespread corruption and human rights abuses during Marcos' 20-year rule.

Toronto bus accident injures 20

TORONTO - A bus carrying Buffalo, N.Y., college students and their families on an outing to the Toronto Zoo slammed into a chain link fence Sunday, injuring at least 20 people, three critically.

The bus, with 40 people from Erie County (N.Y.) Community College on board, abruptly veered from the center lane of the expressway in suburban Mississauga and crashed, said Ontario Provincial Police Sgt. Frank Harvey.

"The top of the fence went through the windshield and traveled the length of the bus," he said. "At least three people were impaled." Victims were taken to five hospitals in the Toronto area, Harvey

A spokesman for Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children said one of the accident victims, a boy, was in critical condition there, while one patient at Mississauga Hospital and another at St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto were also listed in critical condition.

Chairman views 1972 missile limits

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration should reaffirm its commitment to the 1972 treaty limiting missile defenses instead of viewing the pact in a way that permits "Star Wars" research, the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee said Sunday.

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., termed the administration's view of the treaty "defective and counterproductive" and said it would lead to a new arms race in space.

Also Sunday, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, asked the Air Force to formally support the single-warhead nuclear missile known as "Midgetman.

Fascell's statement was the latest round in a six-month old fight over whether the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty limits research and development into high-tech defenses against nuclear attack. The Reagan administration contends that the pact does not ban such research and is going ahead with the Star Wars plan, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Soviets want SDI halted, but the administration says the American program is needed partly to offset a similar Soviet effort. Administration officials, including Secretary of State George Shultz, said last fall that in their view the administration was legally justified in a loose interpretation of the pact.

Congress to return from vacation

WASHINGTON - Congress returns from its Easter recess this week with the House ready to take up firearms legislation that has put the National Rifle Association and police organizations at opposite ends of the barrel.

The Senate Finance Committee will resume its work on a tax overhaul bill, while on the Senate floor debate continues on whether to sell Washington's two federal airports to a local authority.

The House reconvenes Tuesday to consider some non-controversial bills, including one naming a fellowship program after Christa McAuliffe, the New Hampshire teacher who died in the space shuttle Challenger explosion.

Then, on Wednesday, the representatives are scheduled to debate and decide between competing versions of legislation to alter the 1968

A bill sponsored by Rep. Harold L. Volkmer, D-Mo., and supported by the NRA is similar to Senate-passed legislation. It would permit interstate sale and transportation of handguns, rifles and shotguns.

Dissident discovers 'ocean of love'

TEL AVIV, Israel - Anatoly Shcharansky says he has been enveloped in "an ocean of love" since being released from Soviet captivity and immigrating to Israel two months ago.

Shcharansky, 38, jailed for nine years in prisons and labor camps, was freed in an East-West prisoner exchange Feb. 11. Soon after arriving in the Jewish state to a tumultuous welcome, he went off for more than a month of seclusion in northern Israel.

"In the Soviet Union I got accustomed to many years of living in a sea of hatred. Now I have to get accustomed to living in an ocean of love," Shcharansky told 2,000 students in Jerusalem on Saturday night.

The daily Yediot Ahronot quoted the human rights activist as saying he could no longer bear to see his pictures in the papers or read articles about himself. "Although I have returned to normal life, people still relate to me like a symbol," he was quoted as saying. Shcharansky plans a tour of the United States in May.

Professor attributes Samoan dispute to personal vendetta

By SUE DAWSON Collegian Reporter

A long-standing controversy on the nature of the Samoan people has been based on a personal vendetta, said Lowell Hormes, professor of anthropology and chairman of the department of anthropology at The Wichita State University.

Hormes spoke Friday about "Quest for the Real Samoa: Assessing Mead and Freeman" during a Department of Biology colloquium. Both Margaret Mead and Derek Freeman studied the Samoan culture in Polynesia but delivered conflicting reports upon their return to the United States.

Mead studied the lives of adolescents in Samoa to compare their lives to those of American teenagers. She believed American youths were under more pressure. making their transition to adulthood more difficult.

In her 1925-26 study, Mead found "young people (in Samoa) were given responsibility as they could handle it" and "sexuality came very naturally," Hormes said. This meant the Samoan adolescents had an easy coming of age in Mead's opinion. Hormes said in 1954 he did the "world's first methodological restudy" of Samoa, the Samoan people and Mead's work.

He said he went to the same village as Mead did, used some of her same informants and tried to diminish the elements of time and change.

"I had to find cultural change in about 30 years" since Mead's work the mid-1920s, he said. To do this, Hormes said he reconstructed three documented cultures in Samoa: 1850s works written by missionaries, Mead's work and his own study.

Hormes said there was a "personal equation" involved in Mead's study. He was in his 30s, married and had a child, and was considered an adult by Samoan standards.

When Mead did her study, she was 23, of small build and married, but she did not let on to this, he said, therefore, she was considered an adolescent. Hormes said this might have affected the amount of information Mead was provided by the Samoans.

Freeman went out in the field in Samoa in 1966-67, Hormes said. Freeman corresponded with Hormes, asking for reprints and photocopies of Hormes' published findings. Hormes said Freeman was consciously working on a rebuttal of Mead's work.

"He was specifically trying to, let's say, sabotage Margaret Mead's work," he said. "Freeman went out with the idea of destroying Margaret Mead's idea of Samoan culture.'

Freeman's claims against Mead were unfounded, Hormes said, and his sources were questionable. He said Freeman took many quotes from a book entitled "Tales from the Margaret Mead Taproom," whose authors included cartoonist Gary Apparently the book was a spoof on Mead, and the authors collected thier data by sitting in the bar of the village hotel talking to locals, Hormes said.

Other claims Freeman made were that the Samoans were aggressive, sexually repressed and highly competitive, Hormes said. Mead thought the people were more passive and openly sexual.

Hormes said a comparison of Freeman's and Mead's works was not feasible because Freeman looked at a modern Samoan culture while Mead's was more tribal.

He said he believes there is a middle ground between Freeman's and Mead's theories. "Freeman is not right on all respects in this controversy," Hormes said." Hormes said Mead had problems with others in the anthropology field judging her. "I haven't always loved Margaret," he said. She gave him a negative review on one of his books

Hormes said he found Mead's work "factually good" especially in "evaluating teen-age behavior."

hase County wins design contest

By PAT HUND Collegian Reporter

A discarded bank computer and four wheels from a Tonka truck Tim Jones had "to fight a younger brother for" helped his high school team from Chase County capture first place in the second Mousetrap Missile Launcher high school design competition Saturday.

The competition was in conjunction with the All-University Open House in the Durland Hall Atrium.

Jones and T. W. Burton, students at Chase County High School, received $80 and a plaque for the most accurate missile launcher among the 18 launchers entered.

"I was surprised to win, because our launcher was designed simpler than most of the ones (mousetrap missile launchers) that were entered," Jones said.

In the Mousetrap Missile Launcher competition the contestants were required to build a vehicle which would travel in a straight line and launch a pingpong ball to a predetermined firing area in an attempt to land the ball in the target area.

Each vehicle was specified to have two standard mousetraps for propulsion of the vehicle and launching of the pingpong ball.

Jones said the body of his vehicle was a thin metal piece taken from a computer terminal thrown away by a local bank.

"The wheels came from my brother's Tonka truck, and I had to fight him for them," he said.

Jones said Barton and he had been working on the competition since January "for about an hour every

Their winning throw either hit the nail in the center of the landing area or came very close to hitting the nail, Jones said.

The target area was six meters from the starting line and two meters to the right.

Brian Lee of Kensington High School received $40 and a plaque for his second-place effort in the competition, said Todd Schemm, senior in industrial engineering and coordinator of the Mousetrap Missile Launcher competition and Willie's Paper Airplane competition.

Richard Gleason, Dave Theis and Pat Friss, students from Spearville, won a third-place plaque with their missile-launching vehicle, Schemm

"The missile launcher competition is an introduction to engineering design skills for the high school stu-

"Any high schooler was eligible to enter either event," Schemm said.

The events were sponsored by Steel Ring, an honorary engineering society, and monetary awards were given by the College of Engineering, Schemm said.

Highland Park High School, Topeka, dominated the paper airplane competition winning the top four places including a first-place finish by Tisha Peoples who received $55 and a plaque.

Winning second- and third-place prizes of $35 and $15 were Denise Wesky and Bryant Barton, students at Highland Park.

The paper airplane was judged on accuracy of flight, said Craig Wallace, fifth-year student in architectural engineering.

The students attempted to hit a predetermined target area from three positions in Durland Atrium.

Union director closes his mind, art exhibit

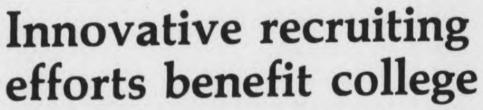

This weekend, during the All University Open House, an annual celebration that serves to inform the public about all the good things happening at K-State, Union Director Walt Smith demonstrated just how close minded he could be.

Smith temporarily closed a display of nude artwork by Michael Florian Jilg Friday and then reopened the show with black paper draped over the gallery's doors so people would not be exposed to its contents.

In his haste to protect the public, Smith forgot to tell the Fort Hays State University art professor of his decision. Jilg was outraged when a reporter broke the news to him Sunday.

Perhaps the exhibit, which will run until Friday, could have been scheduled at a different time or the most explicit pieces placed elsewhere, but the University should not try to hide exhibits from the public.

recruit students during the All University Open House should be commended. Their ideas, such as offering scholarships to prospective students just for visiting the college, are exactly what's needed if the University is going to survive declining enrollments and budget cuts.

The College of Human Ecology was one such college offering scholarships during Open House. The college had current University students fill out entry forms and send them to prospective students, who then returned them when they visited campus Saturday. A drawing of these prospective students' forms was held later in the day and a scholarship was awarded. The University student who had the most prospective students visit the college also students to K-State. received a scholarship.

The real winners in such efforts

The recent efforts of colleges to are not the students who are awarded the scholarships or other prizes; rather it is the college and University which prosper in the end.

> By offering such inducements to prospective students, a college encourages them to visit campus and find out what it has to offer. Scholarships and promotions involving students already attending K-State also are beneficial to the University, because they encourage current students to promote their school to others.

K-State needs innovative ideas and new approaches as it encounters increasing competition for students. It is obvious from the Open House activities that college administrators are working deligently to attract quality

Re: Dan Walter's letter, "Slattery negligent," in the April 2 Collegian:

Very much contrary to what Walter thinks there are many constituents of U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, Kansas, who totally oppose President Reagan's attempts to kill and destroy in Central America; who know that the Sandinista government poses no threat, real or imagined, to our government; that the Sandinistas are a popularly supported and freely elected government (by 67 percent of the voters); that the country is not controlled by any outside force or ideology or agents; that there has never been a single shred of legitimate evidence of the Nicaraguan goverment exporting revolution, drugs or terrorism while there is all kinds of evidence of contras running drugs. Contra atrocities are well documented by Amnesty International, Witness for Peace and many other U.S. citizens who have been there.

We know all this because of the te of everyday citizens, many from Kansas, who have testified after being in Central America. Several of the ones from Kansas testified at a public hearing in Topeka, March 21. In no way could anyone claim these people are Communists, Marxists or even sympathizers. Their testimony was overwhelming and completely contradicted the lies the Reagan administration is telling means to be an "American for biblical government." What are the values being portrayed as biblical? There are many Americans who understand biblical values in regard to government responsibility as justice, righteousness, mercy, forgiveness, grace, compassion and love. It is virtually impossible to see how support for the contras can accomplish any of these biblical values. Again, I say that nowhere in the Bible are we told to support a government that does killing and destruction, that spends hundreds of millions on bombs and terrorism while there are homeless and hungry people, or that supports fighting forces that are killing women and children and school teachers and other

There simply is no legal or moral justification for what is being done and is being portrayed as in our national security interests. It makes a mockery of biblical values to suggest otherwise, it seems to me.

Blind patriotism

Re: Dan Walter's letter, "Slattery negligent," in the April 2 Collegian.

Seeing your obvious concern and active interest in U.S. involvement in Nicaragua, I assume that you took the time to listen to former CIA agent John Stockwell speak out about his firsthand experience with matters such as your letter concerns. If for some reason you did not attend, I will assume you at least bothered to read Tim Carpenter's April 2 story summarizing Stockwell's speech.

I'm speaking specifically of Stockwell's contention that "torture, under supervision of CIA case officers, is carried out in many nations. A common method of torture is to sexually attack and mutilate one family member while the rest of the family is forced to watch."

How can you, in a clear conscience, call yourself an "American for Biblical government?" Stockwell is not alone in his claims he gave an extensive bibliography of books, articles, personal accounts and other sources of firsthand experience of the atrocities - we cannot deny that this is happening and the good old United States is responsible.

I'm not saying the decisions to be made are black and white - they're not - the situation is extremely complex. I'm advocating that we, as Americans, don't overlook the possibility of horrifying things happening to human beings in other countries just to simplify things in our minds.

I am a patriotic American, and I believe in living by the Bible, but the Bible doesn't say the end justifies the means. Open your eyes and see the entire situation before blind patriotism leads us to have nothing to be Re: Lillian Zier's editorial, "U.S. economy falters as price of oil drops," in the April 3

Now, it's pretty obvious you been readin' Newsweek an' that's OK, but, honey, you need to do a little of yer own investigatin' Yer comments in the Collegian imply that economic diversification is sumthin' we Texans have just begun to pursue in the last month or so.

Texas has been tryin' (and with some success, I might add) to diversify its economy for the last several years, but as Kansans know from their own efforts, that's pretty darn difficult to do with all these other lesser states tryin' to get a piece of the same pie.

Childish concerns

Re: Shawn McCune's letter, "Take artwork down," in the April 2 Collegian.

While McCune is on the subject of repressed persons' rights (those having the right not to view Michael Florian Jilg's artwork on display in the Union Art Gallery, but yet lured in and disgusted anyway), why doesn't he mention other people who have repressed rights?

What about the Nazis' rights to do as they please to the Jews in their own country? What about the rights of the slave owners to have slaves so they can make more money? Of course, I'm not serious, and I have a hard time believing McCune is either, with his amateurish, "But what about ...?" argument. If one doesn't like a gallery show, one doesn't have to look at it. No one is being forced into the gallery. Just because one or two people are upset is no reason to prevent others from enjoying the show. The gallery is a privilege, brought to

K-State by a group of intelligent individuals concerned with artistic freedom and integrity. One should be glad that these people are working hard to bring quality art to K-State.

McCune, I respect your opinion, but making silly demands backed by juvenile arguments is no way to get your point across. As an alternative, you might try contacting the gallery coordinators and expressing your opinion about the shows in a clear, logical manner. I am positive they will appreciate your view and will consider it when selecting future shows.

Thanks for charity

Editor,

It is exciting to see the Farrell Library collection growing toward a second million volumes. That look to the future accompanies the engaging looks to the past provided in the rare and impressive books added to Farrell's Special Collections in celebration of the millionth volume milestone.

Many groups and individuals have contributed to this growth, but one group deserves special mention: the K-State students who have provided an impressive collection of books to carry the momentum into the second million.

It is not unusual for student groups to raise funds for worthy causes, but it is particularly touching to see that effort begin, as charity must, at home. The books donated by these students will enrich the academic lives of generations of students in the future.

So, to the students of Alpha Chi Omega Alpha Delta Pi, Blue Key, Boyd Hall, Chi Omega, Kappa Delta, Putnam Hall and the Student Chapter of the American Veterinary Medical Association, a very special "Thank you" for your generosity and your foresight. Peg Wherry

Re: Bill Kossow's letter, "Amateur art critic," in the April 2 Collegian:

Since Kossow expressed an importance to have some authority in art to be able to comment on it, I will tell you about my interactions with art. I won many art awards through the years, including college-level competitions. I am a member of the Dallas Museum of Art. My aunt was a well-known artist on the West Coast and my brother is an artist in Dallas.

In other words, I was literally surrounded by art as I grew up. So, with my tiny piece of authority, I'd like to comment on Kossow's

First, I would like to say that some of the paintings done by Michael Florian Jilg showed wonderful talent. But the other pieces are what concern me. Porter Brock wrote a letter to the editor expressing his contempt towards these paintings. Kossow attacked Brock by saying, "Obviously, Brock is not too familiar with art or artistic talent."

Then Kossow goes on to compare Jilg's art with Michelangelo's. A person who is "familiar with art" would never compare Jilg to Michelangelo.

Michelangeo's paintings are "exquisite and breathtaking" as Kossaw said, but if Michelangelo had painted women in the poses that Jilg did he would have been excommunicated.

I am not a conservative person and I am certrainly not trying to take away Kossow's right to view that type of work. He can buy it at the corner store. But until it is a generally accepted part of society to have "art" like this shown to the public, we shouldn't have to deal with it - whether you are an expert art critic or not.

Mayors unattentive

Re: Diane Czapla's letter, "Abiding by the rules," in the April 3 Collegian.

Regarding Czapla's opinions, I totally agree that a majority vote is not the sole determining factor in any decision. The survey was meant to show how the residents feel and go along with our sample pet policy.

My concerns with the mayors were that they were not interested in even hearing the issue until I petitioned the residents. Then they had us do all the work while they threw problems at us. We took these problems and came up with solutions and what we feel is a good policy. After all this, they voted "No" on our policy without any reason given.

What is shocking to me is that these same mayors made no effort to solve the very problems they threw at us: stray animals, health problems and enforcement of our current policy. We have one building in Jardine Terrace with seven cats in it, and almost all buildings have one or two. It is clear there is a problem and if our policy is not the answer they should be working on one of their own.

No. I will not attend another meeting with these mayors who are interested in easy answers and how little paper work they can do so they can get home. I have put my name on the list to be a council member next fall and will then work for concerned mayors and to see that Jardine residents know the issues and who is deciding those issues that affect their lives.

"We were not consulted at all," she said. "I found out the gallery was closed on Friday because the administration felt it might be offensive to younger children and people had no choice to look at it or not when they passed by."

The black paper on the door may have been more attractive to the curious, Schwarzenholz said, because people came in to see the nudity, turning the screening of the gallery into a "sham."

"Many, many people with young children came in and didn't give any negative reaction. It's simply because it was not offensive art," she Jilg said the closing and screening of the exhibit is an example of the conservative trend across the United States.

"Do they think people were born with their clothes on? Children don't even notice it, but it's their parents that do," Jilg said. "That's a real preventive step. I never supposed a university would do this, especially one that big.

"I think the university shouldn't have to be affected by that kind of pressure. They're starting to worry about images rather than freedom of expression. It's too bad a university would have to get that way," he said.

Woodward said she didn't support censorship in the broad sense and the show shouldn't have been censored in and of itself, but some parents would probably not expect to see that kind of a display at open house.

If parents took their children to an art gallery they might expect to see this kind of art, Woodward said. She questioned whether it was fair to confront them at open house with this kind of a display in the Union Art Gallery, a gallery which many people don't know exists.

Reaction against the screening was expressed by Charles Stroh, head of the Department of Art.

"I think that they were wrong in closing the exhibit. They should have had more consultation on it; it appears that they went ahead and made a move without any outside input," Stroh said.

There are times when certain kinds of things will cause problems from the response of people, Stroh said, and those involved end up setting moralistic policy for the University. The exhibit may offend some who are passing through the Union, but that's not to say they should close the exhibit, he said

"The work is good work, the artist is a good artist and he is respected and well-known throughout the region," Stroh said.

The exhibit will be in the Union Art Gallery until Friday. It was chosen nearly a year ago by the UPC Arts Committee after they saw a preview of Jilg's work.

Schwarzenholz said she and cocoordinator Meredith Radke, junior in art education, scheduled the work with the knowledge it would be displayed during open house.

Dancers display 'light' mood

By TRINA KLOTZBACH Collegian Reporter

Combining athletics and grace, the K-State Dance Workshop performed to a small but appreciative audience Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Dance Keview

Though the dancing was not without flaws, the ensemble was bouncy and clean and established good rapport with the audience.

The concert had a light-hearted, sometimes silly mood, established with the first piece, "Doo-Dah." Choreographer Luke Kahlich poked good-natured fun of the classical music of Bizet as the dancers seemed to play a game of "shoot 'em up" with each other.

"Presley" had the audience laughing as Gregory Alan danced the part of a '50s playboy while three girls swooned over him. Alan was exceptional in the role and seemed more comfortable with this dance than with the other pieces he per-

Alan also proved his budding talent as a choreographer with "Cloud Nine," created for himself and Jean Hwang. The modern dance was filled with difficult lifts, demonstrating the upper body strength of Alan. The most thought-provoking piece of the evening was "An Unopen Window." The modern dance told the story of three young women secluded from the outside. When two of the women finally do join the outside world, the audience watched as the third woman struggled with her loneliness and frustration. Choreographer Roxanne Bartush had a good understanding of the music and Beccy Porter did a noteworthy job as the third woman.

The most polished of the pieces was danced by Bartush and Kahlich. The couple performed a light, easy-going duet to the music of D. Quay. Kahlich and Bartush were so relaxed and comfortable with each other, sweeping across the floor in smooth, graceful steps and turns, they had full command of the audience's at-

The classical ballet solo, "Elegia," was danced nicely by Judith Quirk. Quirk's movements were fluid and the choreography took full advantage of her long legs and solid techni-

There were two other ballet pieces, "Farewell to a Few" and "Valse." Though the choreography demanded very basic pointe work, the dancers seemed less comfortable with them than the jazz and modern works. An exception to this was Traci Ferrell, who displayed very strong pointe work and technique.

City girl shows hog, places third in division

Little American Royal not just for 'aggies'

A flaming redhead with a fair complexion, dressed in garb suitable for doing dirty work around a herd of swine, appears as if she were reared a farm child. Kim Williams, graduate student in family therapy, couldn't be further from that image.

Williams, originally from Boston, landed in Kansas with both feet on the ground. She took an interest in finding out what Kansas life has to offer and decided participating in the Little American Royal was a good way to "The idea of a Bostonian chasing a pig around was hysterical," she said.

She chose to groom and show a hog because she was told they were the easiest to

"I'm an original city kid. I'm one that used to think milk came from a carton.

"I have no idea what to expect," she said.

Prior to the show she had no expectations, except to go in the ring and not cause a hog riot.

After drawing the number of the hog she would show in the LAR, she spent several evenings with Beulah, the name she dubbed her selection.

She has come to the conclusion that hogs are smart animals. "They can even open their gate by themselves!"

However, it's hard to figure out what motivates Beulah, she said. The pig has turned down most of the usual bribes such as apples and candy.

Williams said her grandmother was mystified about her motivation for wanting to show a hog.

"She can't believe her granddaughter, a professional therapist, showing a pig. She is," Williams said.

Her life has not been completely void of livestock. When she was still living on the East Coast, she was part of an equestrian team, but opted not to show a horse at halter because of her inexperience.

When Saturday came Williams was a little nervous but ready for the show.

She and Beulah were to show in the last of the six swine classes scheduled. The pair placed third in their class behind two students who are experienced showmen.

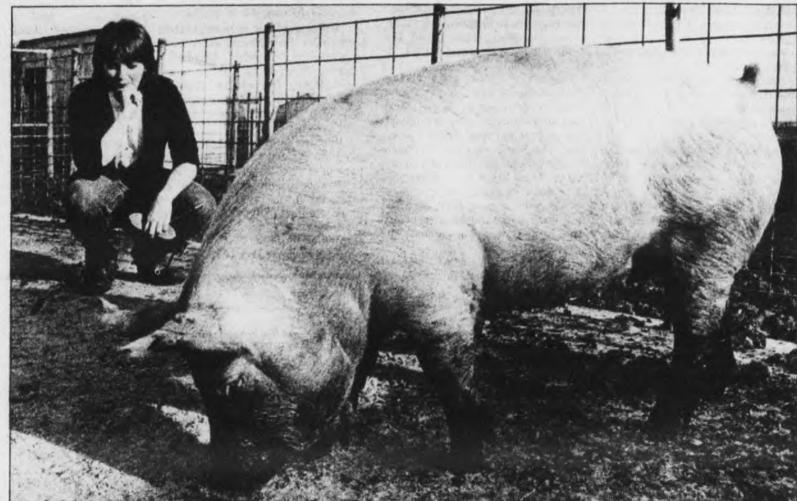

'I liked showing and found that just about anyone can show, even a Bostonian. You don't just have to be a show jock to show.'

- Kim Williams

"The judge came over and told us what we had done right and wrong and he didn't say anything negative, which surprised me. He told me I had done a good job and that I was really relaxed with my pig and the only reason he put me in third was because the two fellas in first and second had done a lot more showing than I," William said.

"I liked showing and found that just about anyone can show, even a Bostonian. You don't just have to be a show jock to show," she said.

"I now appreciate the amount of work it takes to fit and show an animal so that the judge is impressed with the work you've done. It has also added to my appreciation of agriculture," Williams said.

Kim Williams, graduate student in family therapy, devoted several evenings in preparing to show Beulah, her Little American Royal hog entry. Williams, originally from Boston, decided to show a hog in the LAR to find out what Kansas life had to offer.

Students compete in livestock show

The chance to be center stage in a show ring doesn't come often enough for some people. Nearly 170 students had the opportunity to be in the show ring Saturday at the 58th Annual Little American Royal in Weber Arena.

These students participated in the show by exhibiting either beef, dairy, horses, sheep or swine.

Students were provided the opportunity to prove their showmanship skills by fitting and showing University-owned livestock.

Cindy Houck, junior in preveterinary medicine, was selected as the grand champion beef showman and Patrick Campbell, senior in animal sciences and industry, was reserve champion. Bill Conley, Clarksdale, Mo., and Jerome Settles, Norfolk, Neb., judged the beef showmen.

Bill James, Abilene, judged the horse division and selected Shawn Dorsch, junior in pre-professional business administration, as the grand champion and Janette Poole, freshman in agricultural journalism, as reserve champion.

The dairy division was judged by Ray Withers, Erie. Amy Ochampaugh, freshman in agricultural journalism, was recognized as the grand champion showman and Mark Brown, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, won the number two spot.

Mark Maris, senior in feed science management, took top honors as swine showman and Brian Hines, freshman in animal sciences and industry, received reserve. Duane Messner, Coffeyville, judged the swine division.

"The purpose of the show is for students to gain experience working with livestock," said Dave Nichols, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry and faculty adviser for the LAR.

"There are two sets of students who participate — students who have done an awful lot of it (showing livestock) and are very competitive and then we have the other kind of student who has never been around livestock at all," Nichols said. "I'm not certain which one benefits more."

For the inexperienced showman, there are people available to help them and training sessions at the barns explaining how to groom and show the livestock, Nichols said.

"Showing is de-emphasized in some livestock circles," he said. "The judging in the LAR is based entirely on how the animal is groomed for the show and how they are handled in the show ring. Confirmation of the animal has no bearing on the judges' decisions."

The participants' animals are chosen through a drawing. They have no choice in the animals they receive, Nichols said.

Each year the LAR is dedicated to an individual considered outstanding in the animal science industry. This year's dedicatee was Charles Norton, professor of animal sciences and industry.

University faculty and administration representatives discussed the role of minorities in politics during a program sponsored by the Department of Political Science and the Ethnic Studies Program.

The discussion was part of a special presentation at the All-University Open House Saturday.

Jan Flora, associate professor of sociology, spoke on minorities and the immigration problem in the United States.

Flora said there are both positive and negative effects of immigration affecting America today.

He said one positive element is that America is considered a "nation of immigrants" which gives it a unique culture.

Another positive element, he said, is that immigration keeps the United States from becoming isolated, which allows an influx of more culture and helps in the exchange of information.

Flora said immigration works to apply pressure on countries about in-

Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney, stressed the Negative elements, Flora said, are the surplus of low-wage labor in the need to keep up with the Affirmative Action programs for the continued United States and a "brain drain" of support of minorities. Thompson the resources from developing counsaid there is "clear evidence" tries. He also cited a buildup of ethnic and racial conflict in America

Thompson said political movements in the future need to maintain equal opportunities.

Apartheid and minorities were the topic of discussion of David Hirschmann, associate professor of political science.

Hirschmann said if a person were to add up all the minorities, a majority would result.

The use of the word minority is deceptive because it serves to keep minorities from uniting in their efforts, he said.

"Oppressed in the world are not the minority; they are the majority," Hirschmann said.

SEA urging peers to write new president

By The Collegian Staff

Students have an opportunity to get a head start in communicating their concerns to in-coming University President Jon Wefald through a letter-writing campaign.

Wefald will be participating in a question and answer period to hear student opinion from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. today in the Union Courtyard.

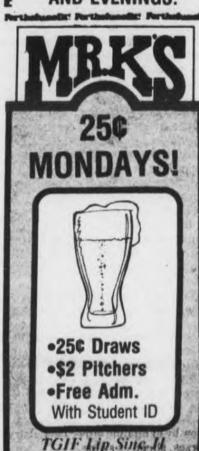

Students for Educational Awareness posted signs on campus urging students and faculty to write Wefald and voice their thoughts about the University.

The posters, which have been posted on bulletin boards for more than a week, have tear slips with Wefald's address on them.

"We had several people ask us if we had his (Wefald's) address, so we thought there was enough interest," said Catherine Sayler, non-degree graduate student and SEA member. There are 10 to 15 slips gone from each poster so hopefully the letters are on their way.'

In a telephone interview, Wefald said he has received few letters, but the few were "very welcoming."

A player's message is reflected on a bumper sticker.

EMPORIA — "Survive" is exactly what the K-State rugby club team did this weekend as they won three out of four games, capturing third place in the All-Mid Kansas Rugby Tournament.

K-State headed into the tournament hoping to play in the championship game and bring the first place trophy back to Manhattan.

Those hopes died in their first game Saturday, as they lost to the Wichita B Side 3-0 in a game that was not supposed to take place until later in the tournament. Several teams dropped out of the tourney, jumbling the bracket seedings to make the two teams meet in the first round.

K-State and Wichita met last year in the tournament championship game, where Wichita defeated K-State 4-3. Having to meet in the first round this year was a surprise to both teams.

This year's game started as a strong defensive battle with both teams holding each other well. As the game progressed, Wichita's kicking began to hurt K-State and eventually brought K-State a 3-0 defeat.

"They kick the ball very well," K-State player coach Gregg Barnes said. "They have been playing together for a long time and their experience showed.

"We did not execute well, which gave them the advantage," Barnes said.

K-State's second game of the tournament, and of the day, was against the Garden City Rugby Club, who arrived for the game with just four players. To complete the Garden City roster, K-State and Riley County gave the team some of their substitute players.

K-State moved the ball well against Garden City, and with running scores by Mike Powers, Brian Riedel and Bill Knopick, and three extra points, K-State won the game 18-6.

The game did not have the excitement of the first game, but K-State proved they could move the ball.

"They were not much competition since half of their team was made up of our own players," Barnes said. "I do feel that the game may have boosted our confidence." As the first day of action came to a close K-State stood 1-1 and retired to a fried chicken and beer party sponsored by the Emporia Assasins Rugby Club.

Barnes final words to the players before they left was, "let's be party warriors tonight and glaciers tomor-

In the first game Sunday K-State faced the host team, the Emporia Assasins.

In the first half K-State began a scoring rally that tallied four running scores and four extra points to give themselves a 24-0 lead at half. The first two goals were run in by Bill Jeorling and the third by Dave

The fourth and final goal of the half was a power run by Russ Warren, his first goal of the season.

"Three guys were hanging on me, and I did not think I was going to make it," Warren said. "I freed one of the from my back and carried the other two across the goal for a score."

Emporia's defense held K-State to just one score by Keenan Beauchamp in the second half, but K-State shut the Assasins out 34-0 to advance to the third place game against Pittsburg State. K-State's final game of the day.

K-State's final game of the day, and of the tournament, ended with a 34-0 romp over Pittsburg to give K-State a third place finish in the tournament.

K-State scored on drives from Bill

Knopick, Steve Duncan, David Todd, Darren Grannemann and two scores by Brian Riedel. K-State connected on five out of six extra points to defeat Pittsburg.

Overall, Barnes said he was a little disappointed with the tournament due to the teams that did not show up.

"We wanted to use the tournament as a tune-up for the Western Championships in two weeks at Las Cruces, N.M., and we did not get to play some of the better teams and get quality work outs like we wanted," Barnes said.

K-State now stands at 5-3 and will play the University of Kansas Club team next Saturday in Manhattan.

K-State player Xentho Olltatton downs a mouthful of relief after the team captured third place in the weekend tournament.

K-State Rugby Club member Russ Warren crosses the goal line for his first score of the season as the rest of the team celebrates during a game Sunday against Emporia in the All Mid-Kansas Rugby Tournament.
